"QUICK ACTION INAUGURATION" GAINS FAVOR

May Be Basic Law January, 1930.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—With an administration and a congress marking time for four months, at great expense, until the new regime is inaugurated, there is increasing sentiment in favor of an earlier installation of a newly elected president and of a new congress.

The judiciary committee of the senate now has before it the Ashurst resolution proposing a constitutional amendment providing that the presidential term shall commence on the third Monday of January following an election, that the presidential electors shall cast their votes on the second Monday in December, that congress shall canvass the vote on the second Monday of January, and that the terms of senators and representatives shall begin on the first Monday of January.

Effective in 1929.

The amendment empowers congress to change these dates in its discretion and provides that it shall not take effect until after March 4, 1925.

If this proposed amendment should be adopted without change the president elected in 1928 would take office two and a half instead of four months and the new congress two instead of thirteen months after the election, and the presidential vote would be canvassed by the incoming instead of the outgoing congress.

In 1914, when the Democrats were in control of congress, an effort to effect this change proved unsuccessful, but Senators Nelson (now chairman), Cummins, Shields, Ashurst, and Fletcher of the judiciary committee submitted a minority report which forcefully assembles the arguments in its favor.

Reflects Will of Majority.

The reasons given by this report for the adoption of the proposed amendment are:

"First—Congress should at the earliest practicable time enact the principles of the majority of the people as expressed in the election of each congress. Any evasion of this is subversive of the fundamental principle of our government, that the majority shall rule.

"Second—As the law is at the present time, the second regular session does not convene until after the election of the succeeding congress. As an election often changes the political complexion of a congress, under the present law many times we have the injustice of a congress that has been disapproved by the people enacting laws for the people opposed to their last expression.

Question of Seat Contests.

"Third—Under the present system a contest over a seat in the house of representatives is seldom ever decided until more than half the term, and in many instances until a period of twenty-two months of the term has expired. By congress meeting the first Monday in January succeeding the elections, contested election cases can be disposed of at least during the first six months of the congress.

"Fourth—The president and vice president should enter upon the performance of their duties as soon as the new congress can count the electoral votes. It is the old congress which now counts the electoral votes. It is dangerous to permit the defeated party to retain control of the machinery by which such important officers are declared elected.

Might Change Election.

"In the event that no candidate for president receives a majority of the electoral votes the constitution provides that the house of representatives shall elect the president, the representation from each state having one vote. At the present time it is the old congress that elects the president under such contingency, and thereby it becomes possible for a political party repudiated by the people to elect a president who was defeated at the election. Under the present provision of the constitution, in the event the house fails to choose a president before March 4, then the vice president then in office becomes president for four years. This affords a great temptation, by mere delay, to defeat the will of the people, and if it is ever exercised it will likely produce a revolution."

LOCKS UP WIFE, 2, 30 DAYS; FOUND NEARLY STARVED

Husband Barricades and Fences Home.

As a result of an imprisonment of thirty days in her home at 4801 McCook avenue, East Chicago, Mrs. John Novak is seriously ill in a hospital at Crown Point.

The strange ordeal, said by the East Chicago police to be without parallel in the vicinity, was imposed by her husband. Her two small children were imprisoned with her. No one was permitted to see them.

Novak, a mechanic who owns a home, first built a ten foot fence around his two story frame residence. He then boarded and barricaded all the windows and fitted doors and gates with heavy padlocks.

Accident Bares Captivity.

Neighbors suspected all was not well, but did not guess the facts until Novak was injured in a steel mill accident. He went to a hospital, leaving Mrs. Novak and the children still imprisoned. The neighbors notified the police. They battered their way in and rescued the prisoners, who were emaciated and with no subsistence except water. Mrs. Novak's health is said to be permanently impaired.

Novak has been discharged from the hospital and is again living at the house. His barricades still stand. Questioned as to his action, he said he believed he was "entirely within his rights as a husband."

"If a man can't discipline his wife, who can?" he asked.

Thought Love Was Cooling.

"We have been married nine years. About two months ago I became convinced her affection was waning. I talked with her, but she was evasive. I then entered into communication with the higher pneuma. A voice from the cosmic void advised me to go to Washington and talk with President Wilson. I did.

"'John,' said the president, 'there is only one thing to do. Lock her up. Put her in solitary and maybe she will see the light. So then I built the fence and boarded up the windows. Every day I would ask her:

"'Mary, have you seen the light?'

"'What light?' she asked at first.

"'The great light, the shining light,' I explained.

Mary Fails to "See Light."

"She didn't see it. Once or twice she thought she did, but I fancy it was merely a cerebral ignis fatuus, because her attitude toward me remained inflexible. I also learned that a neighbor planned to take her from me. That is why I left the place locked when I went to the hospital."

The police said Mrs. Novak and the children were famished when rescued; that there was no food in the house, and that they had been compelled to subsist on water alone for several days. The neighbors are caring for the children.

$3,000,000 NET PROFITS FOR THIEVES HERE

Police Figures on Robberies Bared.

Thieves' loot in the Chicago district for the year 1920, based on burglaries, holdups, and pocket pickings alone, reached the staggering total of $4,528,453.40—an average daily property loss of more than $12,435.

Embezzlements and forgeries, running into the hundreds of thousands, are not included in these figures as compiled by Chicago's police department. Police records show that of this vast loss only a little more than one-fourth, or $1,403,954 in property and cash, was recovered. This means that more than $3,000,000 was the net loss.

This compares with a record of $3,543,590 in property and cash stolen during 1919, with police recoveries of $972,699. During that year there were 8,983 robbery complains or "squeals" turned into the police department. A record of the exact number of "squeals" during 1920 is unavoidable, but the number has run well above the 13,000 mark, based upon preliminary reports.

Here's Record of Year.

The following, however, is a complete list of the property and monetary losses, month by month, throughout the last year up to and including Dec. 30, together with the monthly reports of property and cash recovered. This record has been checked up and verified with the police reports:

	Property stolen.	Cash stolen.

Cut Down by Fitzmorris.

In fairness to the police department, it should be stated that listed in the property and monetary losses are all the reports turned in by the police and residents of nearby suburbs in cases in which it was believed Chicago criminals may have been implicated. It will be observed by the monthly report that the aggregate monthly losses have been materially reduced since Charles C. Fitzmorris became chief of police in November.

Even a small reduction at this period of the year is of importance since the greatest activtties of criminals of all classes are centered about the holiday season.

The value of the thousands of automobiles stolen during the year is not included in the tabulation for either year. During 1919 4,447 cars were stolen, of which 3,185 were recovered. Figures for 1920 are not yet available.

Figures in 1919.

The following is a complete monthly record of the year 1919, which, in view of the fact that Chief Garrity made no annual report last year, is printed for the first time:

	Property stolen.	Cash stolen.
January	$196,853	$32,716
February	192,497	37,153
March	182,563	47,684

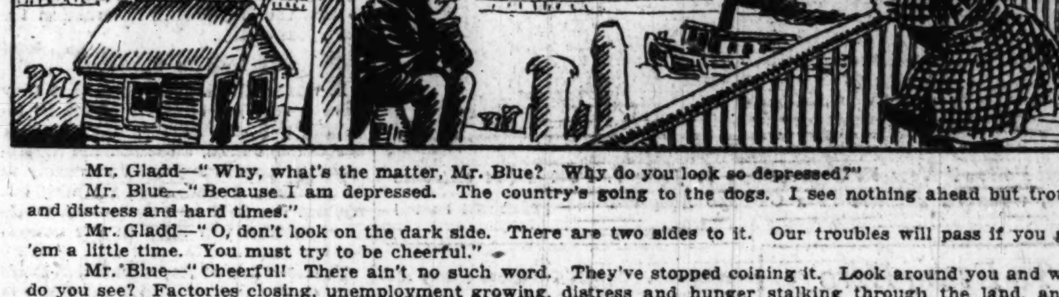
October	94,754	16,386
November	190,306	7,288
December	117,750	10,590
Totals	$775,131	$197,568

Included in the property listed as stolen in the above table is a small percentage reported as lost—that is, property which the losers were not sure was stolen. During 1920 the department did not differentiate between the two.

MR. LUGUBRIOUS BLUE AND MR. SMILEY GLADD DISCUSS THE SITUATION

[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

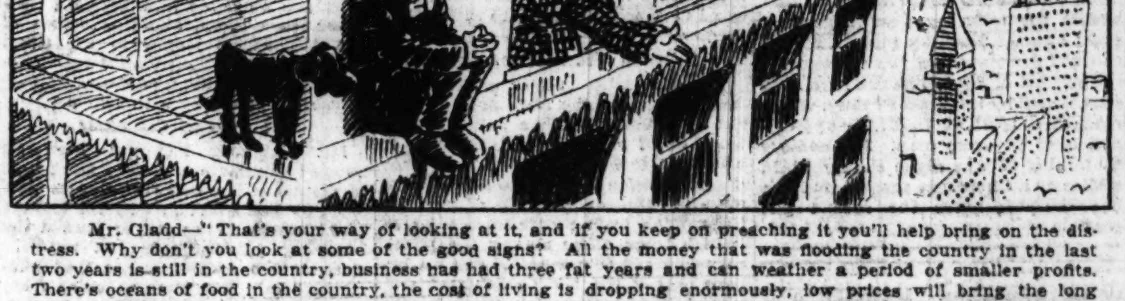


Mr. Gladd—"Why, what's the matter, Mr. Blue? Why do you look so depressed?"

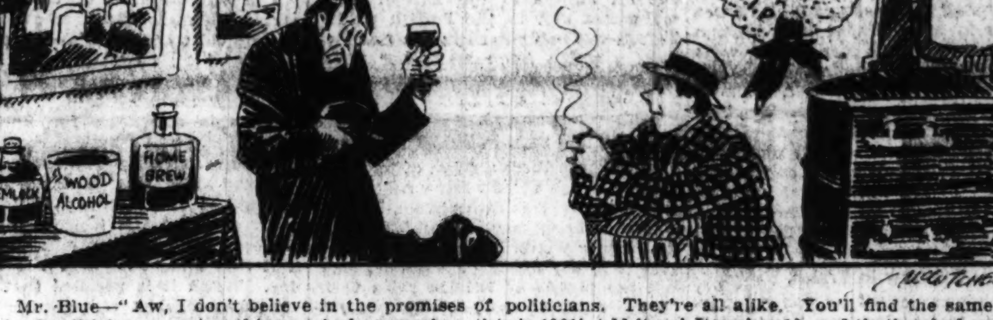
Mr. Blue—"Because I am depressed. The country's going to the dogs. I see nothing ahead but trouble and distress and hard times."

Mr. Gladd—"O, don't look on the dark side. There are two sides to it. Our troubles will pass if you give 'em a little time. You must try to be cheerful."

Mr. Blue—"Cheerful! There ain't no such word. They've stopped coining it. Look around you and what do you see? Factories closing, unemployment growing, distress and hunger stalking through the land, and a hard winter ahead."



Mr. Gladd—"That's your way of looking at it, and if you keep on preaching it you'll help bring on the distress. Why don't you look at some of the good signs? All the money that was flooding the country in the last two years is still in the country, business has had three fat years and can weather a period of smaller profits. There's oceans of food in the country, the cost of living is dropping enormously, low prices will bring the long delayed building boom, and people will have to give up their extravagant habits and settle down to a sensible scale of living. And, furthermore, a business administration in Washington will soon end the orgy of waste in government."



Mr. Blue—"Aw, I don't believe in the promises of politicians. They're all alike. You'll find the same old bunch of politicians running things. And, remember, this is 1921! Add it up! It makes 13, and that's a bad omen!"

Mr. Gladd—"Nonsense! Nineteen hundred and three was a prosperous year. Some of us may feel the pinch in this wholesale shrinking process, but it's better to get it in one dose and have it over with. Just remember the country is enormously rich, our business is sound at the bottom, and we are in a better condition than any other country in the world. Come on, Mr. Blue, cheer up."

CARUSO HAS A SLIGHT SETBACK, DUE TO NOISES

New York, Jan. 1.—[Special.]—The New Year's eve noises and the fluctuations of his disease caused Enrico Caruso, who is ill of pleurisy, to have a slight setback today. All six physicians who are attending him were called in in the morning and were at his side in the afternoon.

It was said at 8:30 tonight that Caruso's general condition was still serious, although he had passed a fairly comfortable day. Earlier in the day a bulletin was given out at a hotel which read:

"Condition still serious, fever continues. He is as comfortable as can be expected under the circumstances."

At 6 o'clock tonight, a second bulletin was issued which reads:

"Mr. Caruso has passed, on the whole, a favorable day. His condition is more satisfactory than it was this morning."

'TENNIS CABINET' FOR HARDING ON TENNIS COURT?

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—Changes about the White House and grounds to meet the wishes of President Elect Harding have been started, the restoration of the tennis court coming in for first attention.

This was started in compliance with an informal request to President Wilson from Senator Harding, who play tennis as well as golf.

The court became famous in President Roosevelt's administration when the little group of men invited to play there almost daily with the president became known as "the tennis cabinet."

N. Y. Broker, Accidentally Shot by Friend, May Die

New York, Jan. 1.—Julian Dick, 34, a New York cotton broker, was accidentally shot and seriously wounded by George Bruce Brooks, son of the late Belvidere Brooks, at Mr. Dick's home here this morning. The shooting resulted from the discharge of an army pistol which Mr. Brooks was examining. At the hospital, where an operation was performed, it was said tonight, Mr. Dick's condition is critical.

Good News for Kids, Candy Price to Fall

New York, Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Announcement was made by a large chain drug concern that candy would be reduced in price ranging from 8 to 33 1-3 per cent, principally as a result of the decrease in the cost of sugar.

TINO AND I HATE GERMANS, SAYS TINPLATE QUEEN

Dollar Princess Is Still 'Yankee at Heart.'

ATHENS, Jan. 1. — [By the Associated Press.]—Princess Anastasia, the American wife of Prince Christopher of Greece, today gave the Associated Press an interview.

"I am still an American at heart," she said. "I did not marry to get a title. The fact that my husband is a prince is against him. I had known him ever since 1912, and when it was a question of marriage I wanted to see if Greece would be against the allies, in which case I would not have married Christopher.

"I regard the king and his family as pro-ally. He told me that he tried three times to put Greece in the war on the side of the allies.

She and King "Hate Germans."

"It is nonsense, these reports that my money bought back the throne. In the first place, I cannot take the principal of my fortune from the United States. I enjoy only the income. Also it is nonsense that I am working to restore the kaiser. I hate the Germans, as also does the king.

"My son (William B. Leeds Jr., son of the late American 'Tin Plate King,' and Anastasia), will remain in America, where his father left a great name, which he must carry on. He should now be in school in England, but he is traveling with my sister because he has asthma.

Wants Son in U. S. Navy.

"If he were not asthmatic I would try to put him in the American navy or army. He is a bright boy, and I am sure that he will make a name for himself, possibly in a diplomatic career.

"The Greeks are most pleasant to me, the soldiers and peasants sending me flowers and trinkets. It is my plan to get a house here for the winters and keep up one in England during the summers. Also, I shall visit my own country."

Cat Disconnects Gas Tube; Man, Wife, and Animal Die

New York, Jan. 1.—Gas which escaped when a rubber tube was disconnected from a feed plug in the floor by a cat today caused the death of Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Weber in their Brooklyn apartment. The dead cat, its paws resting on the tube, lay under the gas stove.

HOTEL MORRISON FIRM DECLARES 17½% DIVIDEND

At a special meeting yesterday of the directors of the Moir Hotel company, owning and operating the Hotel Morrison, the Terrace Gardens, the Hartford building and several movie theaters, it was decided to declare a dividend of 17½ per cent to all stockholders of record on Dec. 31, 1920. A successful business year made the dividend possible.

"I look for this year to be as big in a business way as last year," said Harry C. Moir, president of the company, after the meeting. "While I have met a few calamity howlers, and find it will be necessary to readjust matters in some lines, you will find Chicago has suffered less than any other city as a result of the recent depression.

"I am going right ahead, pushing my plans harder than ever to give Chicago the largest hotel in the world. When the Morrison is completed it will occupy the entire block from Dearborn to Clark and will contain more than 3,400 rooms."

ARREST WIFE WHO ASSISTED SPOUSE'S ESCAPE

Charged with having aided her husband to escape from the city jail at Princeton, Ill., Mrs. Doris Henning, 26 years old, was arrested yesterday at the home of her parents at 1455 West Seventeenth street, and was locked up at Detention Home No. 1.

Mrs. Henning, whose 9 months old baby was taken to the home with her, was arrested on advices of Lieut. John Norton from Sheriff Spaulding of Princeton. A. W. Henning, the woman's husband, had been arrested for forgery, and Mrs. Henning is charged with having taken saws into the jail so that he could cut the bars and escape.

The Chicago authorities were also asked to arrest Henning, but Mrs. Henning states that he has not lived with her since they were in Princeton.

Pickets Guard Worshipers at Irish Night Services

BELFAST, Jan. 1.—A unique spectacle was witnessed in Londonderry early this morning, when the congregations from the watch-night service were escorted to their homes by fully armed military pickets. The curfew law is in operation in Londonderry, and special permission was obtained from the general commanding the military district for the holding of the midnight services. Persons living outside the city were escorted to the last military post and from there sent home.

Shoot, Kidnap Guardian of Insull Farm

Three youths were surprised in an attempt to break into the Libertyville country home of Samuel Insull, head of the Peoples Gas and Commonwealth Edison companies, in search of liquor early yesterday morning. They shot and probably fatally wounded a private guard and then kidnaped him. They carried him to Chicago in a stolen car and then abandoned him.

While making his rounds New Year's morning, Samuel Van Derney, outside guard at the Insull estate, noticed two men prowling in the bushes. Although unarmed, he approached them and asked what they were doing. One of them ordered him to hold up his hands. Before he could obey, however, the other shot him in the chest.

The youths picked up the wounded man, carried him about thirty yards to an automobile, threw him into the back seat and drove away.

Wreck Machine; Abandon Victim.

Traveling at a high rate of speed, they drove down Milwaukee avenue, but at North Kedzie and Fullerton avenues the machine skidded and was wrecked. The robbers jumped from it and fled, abandoning Van Derney and the car. He was found by pedestrians, who notified the police. After the watchman's wounds had been dressed by a physician he was taken to St. Elizabeth's hospital, where it was said that his chances of recovery are slight.

The authorities of Libertyville and the police of the Shakespeare avenue station, who are working on the case, believe the robbers were the same ones who have robbed more than a score of north shore homes of many thousands of dollars worth of valuables in the last few months.

Mr. Insull was much shocked to hear of the shooting of the watchman.

"Van Derney has worked around the estate, off and on, for several years," he said, "and everything possible is being done for him. The men didn't get into the house, the attack occurring on the lawn in front."

Stole La Grange Man's Car.

Mr. Insull said there was no liquor in the house or that there was any great amount of valuables. He admitted, however, that the robbers might have thought there was a well stocked cellar in the house.

An investigation by the police showed that the machine which the bandits were using had been stolen the night before from J. B. Kennedy of La Grange, Ill. At the time of the theft the machine had an Illinois license plate, but the bandits had taken it off and substituted a Pennsylvania plate.

U. S. SEAPLANE FLIES 702 MILES IN 9¼ HOURS

San Diego, Cal., Jan. 1.—Establishing a new American nonstop duration record for pilot and five passengers for seaplanes, the United States naval seaplane N C-5 flew from San Diego, Cal., to Magdalena bay, Lower California, in 9 hours and 15 minutes today. The big triple motored plane covered the 702 miles at an average speed of 72 miles an hour.

According to the schedule of the flight twelve F-5-L machines were to have left Magdalena bay this morning for the next flight to Banderias bay, 445 miles away.

At 7:15 tonight the naval air station announced that it had had no report from the planes because weather conditions interfered with wireless operation.

IRISH REPUBLIC CHIEFS IN U. S. CALLED HOME

Meeting to Decide Policies Cause.

BULLETIN.

New York, Jan. 1.—All voting members of the Irish parliament, Dail Eirann, who have been in this country, were reported tonight to be on their way home. It is reported there will be a meeting of the Irish parliament within the next thirty days to decide on policies that may seriously affect the future activities of the Sinn Fein.

BY JOHN STEELE.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—Scotland Yard, the Irish office, and Dublin castle all declare they have no information as to De Valera's arrival in Ireland. Sir Basil Thompson, chief of the British secret service, says he does not believe De Valera has come to Europe, but that if he has he probably landed in France.

In the meanwhile a Dublin dispatch says that British government agents today began a nation-wide search for De Valera on the Emerald isle.

The word from Dublin says nothing is known there regarding De Valera's reported arrival. He has not been seen in public, and his closest friends profess not to believe he is there. A search of Parnell square a few days ago was believed to have been inspired in the hopes of finding him.

In Communication With England?

From another source I have received a strong hint that De Valera has been in communication with the British government and if he has not arrived he is expected on this side of the Atlantic before long.

This information fits the French theory that he is at some place where he can confer, with safety, with British delegates. If found in the British isles, De Valera would be arrested as a jail breaker, as he escaped from Lincoln jail early in 1919.

It is also possible that the British are willing to bring him over as a part of the plan to split the Sinn Fein in Ireland, where the moderates do not want him, as they fear he would spoil any hopes for a settlement which they have by no means abandoned.

LONDON KEPT GUESSING

LONDON, Jan. 1.—[By the Associated Press.]—Reports that De Valera has landed in Ireland have greatly piqued public curiosity. Newspapers feature the report, but none has succeeded in ascertaining De Valera's whereabouts, nor received any news relative to the Sinn Fein leader, beyond what has been cabled from New York.

On the other hand, there are many who see no improbability in the story and who speculate on De Valera's purpose in coming to Ireland. These, assuming it was possible for the Irish leader to escape the vigilance of watchers, are inclined to believe the government did not oppose his coming, holding that De Valera, as an elected member of parliament, was entitled to avail himself of the invitation recently extended to Irish members of parliament to confer with the government as to means of reaching an agreement on the Irish problem.

Eamonn de Valera is in Ireland, where "he enjoyed his share of the Christmas goose," it was declared today at a meeting of the Irish Vigilance society by Tim McNulty, who presided. In some quarters there is much skepticism regarding the whole story, and Dublin castle's profession of ignorance relative to De Valera's landing encourages doubt as to the accuracy of the report.

See Irish Peace in Six Months.

Sir Hamar Greenwood, chief secretary for Ireland, today reiterated and amplified his optimistic statement on the Irish situation made last night at a dinner given in honor of the Cornell cross country team. In that speech he declared that the two Irish parliaments provided for by the recently enacted home rule bill would be working within six months. "So far as Ulster is concerned," the chief secretary told newspaper correspondents today, "candidates are already being selected, and it is possible that the ministers of the first Ulster cabinet are being talked about."

Called Portent of Good.

The Daily Graphic expresses the opinion, that, taken in conjunction with the pacific attitude of Irish Catholic prelates, De Valera's appearance would be a portent of good rather than evil.

The Evening News says that word of De Valera's arrival in Ireland caused a sensation in Dublin. His intimate political friends, however, could not be induced to admit even the probability of his having landed, the newspaper adds.

TWO MORE SLAYINGS

DUBLIN, Jan. 1.—Dublin castle announces the shooting of a republican who attempted to escape from arrest. The victim was William Slattery, a young farmer who had been arrested at Emly. According to the official version he attempted to escape while on the way to Tipperary with his captors, and was then shot dead

Timothy Madigan of Limerick was also shot dead for failing to obey an order to halt.

The premises of James Warren and Trick Burke, near Bandon, were burned last night.

Soldiers Guard Pontia.

DUBLIN, Jan. 1.—[By the Associated Press.]—The American steamer Pontia, on which De Valera is reported to have arrived here Friday from New York, was still under a strong guard of armed soldiers today. It is considered that there was no possibility De Valera was on board the vessel when it docked. It is suggested that he might have got ashore during the time the vessel was being piloted to the quay.

BOLAND ADDS MYSTERY

New York, Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Harry Boland, secretary to Eamonn de Valera, early today insisted that his "chief" had landed in Ireland despite British denials.

Then Boland projected a new touch of mystery. He accompanied Mrs. Muriel MacSwiney to the pier and escorted her up the Panhandle State preparatory to sailing for Boulogne. In the presence of newspaper men, Boland turned to Mrs. MacSwiney and said in a loud tone:

"Tell the chief (De Valera) everything is all right over here."

Mrs. MacSwiney smiled and promised to deliver the message.

Asked whether the return of De Valera to Ireland was not effected by arrangement with the British government in an effort to bring about peaceful conditions in Ireland, Boland said:

"Mr. De Valera has returned to take his place at the head of the Irish republic. He is the elected representative of the Irish people and his return was made necessary by conditions. That is all I can say on that point."

He declined to state whether De Valera had carried a large sum of money with him.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The situation in Ireland today is nothing short of a tragedy, whether from the point of view of the Irish people or from the standpoint of British honor and prestige.

This is the exordium of the report of the British labor commission which went to Ireland Nov. 30, and details of which are given today. A brief outline of it was made public some time ago.

The commission was headed by Arthur Henderson, M. P., and included six other members.

After giving a diary of the work of the commission, and reviewing the methods of the inquiry, which "was confined to Dublin and its neighborhood and to the southwest of Ireland, which is the most disturbed area of the country," the report continues:

"There is a state of war in Ireland, and what are called outrages and reprisals are but incidents in the bitter campaign. On one hand there are armed forces of the crown, on the other the Irish republican army.

Forces Now in Ireland.

"The government forces in Ireland consist of (a) Military garrison, (b) Royal Irish Constabulary, (c) Auxiliary division.

"In regard to (a), some 50,000 soldiers are at present quartered in Ireland. They are, in the main, young and inexperienced.

"Under the heading (b) are included the so-called black and tans, originally the Royal Irish constabulary, but during the recent troubles resignations from the Irish constabulary made it necessary to enroll Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Welshmen to keep the force up to strength."

Republican volunteers, or Sinn Fein, total 116 battalions of 100 to 1,000 men, and "is far more formidable than any army raised from a population of at most 3,000,000 could ever be," the report continues.

Rapid Growth of Sinn Fein.

"It is formidable, because it is intangible. It is everywhere all the time and nowhere at any given moment. Without the sympathy and support of the vast majority of the population it could not exist. This support is probably more general and effective today than it has been at any previous period.

"The Irish volunteers are fed and harbored by people who, three years ago, were certainly not Sinn Feiners, and some of whom were Unionists. So great has been the provocation by the forces of the crown that 80 per cent of Irishmen and women now regard the shooting of policemen and throwing bombs at lorries with the same philosophic resignation that Lloyd George displays toward arson, pillage, and shooting of civilians at sight in the presence of their wives and children.

Reprisals Are Futile.

"Under such conditions it is practically impossible to bring the Irish republican army to bay. It might be driven underground by use of an overwhelming military force, but it will spring up again when that force has been withdrawn. Executions and torture are not deterrents. They have, indeed, the opposite effect. It is reported on good authority that the day Kevin Barry was hanged several hundred undergraduates of Dublin university enrolled themselves as volunteers.

"Destruction of creameries and manufactories only serves to stimulate recruiting by increasing the number of desperate men. The policy of reprisals by destruction, if carried to its ultimate conclusion, will ruin Ireland outside of Ulster, but will not defeat the volunteers."

Terrorism Is Widespread.

The commission next takes up the question of "attacks upon members of the crown forces" and says: "Members of the royal Irish constabulary have been shot both on and off duty. These cases are regarded by the Sinn Feiners, whether they approve them or not, as reprisals rather than outrages. They were, it is said, the outcome of the British government's policy of coercion and repression manifested in the imprisonment of people without trial, prohibition of public meetings, and similar acts."

"In every part of Ireland that we visited we were impressed by the atmosphere of terrorism which prevailed," the report adds. "People are afraid that their houses might be burned. They fear that they might be arrested, or even dragged from their beds and shot. But the terrorism is accentuated by other less direct methods. Lorries of armed men with their rifles at the ready are frequent sights in the towns and even in country districts.

Unnecessary Invitations.

"We are aware that the Irish secretary would have us believe that these brave men might be shot by cowardly assassins in the streets, but we cannot believe that for men to carry rifles at the ready is a means of protection against the possibility of being shot from a window or at a distance.

"The Royal Irish constabulary often carry black and tan flags on their motor lorries glorying in the title, which has spread fear throughout the land. Sometimes below it will be found a small Sinn Fein flag or a flag of the Irish republic will be trailed at the tail of the lorry in the dust or mire of the road. We would submit that no disciplined force would so deliberately encourage bitterness of spirit or inflame feelings of retaliation in this way."

Black and Tans Guilty of Arson.

On the general question of reprisals, after dealing in detail with a number of specific cases—only two of which were actually investigated by members of the commission—the labor report says:

"Forces of the crown in Ireland have been guilty of arson. In a few instances the government has admitted as much, and we have no doubt that if the chief secretary were pressed to declare the facts in other cases he would be driven, however reluctantly, to make similar admissions. Incendiarism is part of the policy of the black and tans and auxiliaries."

Under the heading "Shooting," the report refers to the "indiscriminate firing which took place at the Croke park football grounds in Dublin. The killed and injured, numbering seventy-three persons in all, included both women and boys, who, it is safe to say, were perfectly innocent victims. If the police succeeded in shooting a gunman they did so by pure accident. The brutal murder of British officers on the same day appears to have overshadowed in the minds of the British public the equally callous murder of innocent people at Croke park. We believe the second crime every whit as bad as the first."

Tyranny in Tralee.

Tralee was visited by the commission and is instanced as "exemplifying more than any other place the demoralizing effects of coercion, repression, and reprisals. The whole population seemed to be sunk in the depths of morbid fear and contagious depression. There is no curfew in Tralee, but the streets become bare soon after darkness sets in. When the commission visited the town the situation was comparatively calm, but the effects of the operation of official determination were very obvious.

"Petty tyranny, beatings, intimidation, raids, threats of violence against husbands uttered to wives, brutal assaults to make boys forswear the Sinn Fein, to denounce the pope, to spit on photographs of the late lord mayor of Cork, to chant the battle cry of the R. I. C., and innumerable other methods of terrorization which were reported to the commission, had left their marks upon the inhabitants.

"The very atmosphere in Tralee was deadening. Conditions there spoke eloquently of what the people had suffered under the black and tans. These have now been partly replaced by the auxiliaries, and it is only fair to state that the commission was informed that the latter were conducting their duties with greater consideration for the inhabitants than they had been accustomed to experience prior to their introduction."

Solution Not in Vengeance.

In conclusion report says: "The final solution of the Irish problem will not be found through a policy of violence or of vengeance. Ultimately it will have to be found along the lines of conciliation and consent, by the more enlightened methods of negotiations. The Irish people have faith in British labor alone among the political parties in this country, and we believe that if the labor movement will persist in its efforts for peace it will be able to make an effective contribution toward the settlement of the most difficult problem now confronting the British people.

"We cannot close this report without an appeal to the British labor movement and to the British public. Things are being done in the name of Britain which must make her name stink in the nostrils of the whole world. The honor of our people has been gravely compromised.

"Nation Held in Subjection."

Not only is there a reign of terror in Ireland which should bring a blush of shame to every British citizen, but the nation is being held in subjection by the empire which has proudly boasted that it is the friend of small nations. Let the people of Britain raise their voices in united demands for the rescue of the Irish people from the rule of force and for the establishment of peace and freedom and a new brotherhood between the people of the British isles.

"Only by repudiating the errors of the past and the infamies of the present can the democracy of Great Britain recover its honor, only by granting to Ireland the freedom which is her due can our people fulfill their great responsibilities toward our sister nation."

To Every Hero

EVERY wounded soldier still in a hospital in the Chicago area was handed a New Year's greeting when he awoke yesterday morning. It consisted of an envelope containing two crisp dollar bills and best wishes for a happy year from that great body of TRIBUNE readers known as Good Fellows. The gift represented the surplus of the Christmas hero fund contributed by the Good Fellows, which reached a total of $5,267.78—approximately $5 for every man. An envelope containing $3 was given each disabled soldier as a Christmas present and late contributions made the second gift possible.

SMALL, LUNDIN, PICK DAHLBERG FOR SPEAKER

Dry to Have Backing of the City Hall.

BY E. O. PHILLIPS.

The new state administration has picked its candidate for speaker of the Illinois house of representatives. Gothard A. Dahlberg, of the South Chicago district, now an assistant corporation counsel, is the man. The final decision was reached at a conference in which the participants were Governor Elect Small, Fred Lundin, Congressman Frank L. Smith, chairman of the state committee, Senator Samuel A. Ettelson, and Harry B. Ward, of Duquoin, secretary of the state committee.

Lieutenants of the Smith-Small combination downstate and the field men for the city hall organization in Chicago were immediately started into action in the campaign to deliver the necessary forty-eight votes to Dahlberg to control the Republican caucus at Springfield Tuesday night and assure to him the Republican nomination for the speakership.

City Hall Is Confident.

It was realized, politically, that they have a real job on their hands in effecting the nomination and election of the Chicago man, although the administration leaders appeared yesterday to be perfectly confident of winning out against the field of a dozen downstate starters who will fight in the caucus for the gavel.

The selection of Representative Dahlberg as the administration candidate is understood to be due to his legislative record as a dry. He is one of the few Chicago representatives who has always had the indorsement of the Anti-Saloon league of Illinois in primary and election campaigns. It is understood that an agremeent has been in existence for some time between Governor Elect Small and the leaders of the Anti-Saloon league to the effect that in the event the administration determined to present a speakership candidate he should be a known dry.

Not Avowed Candidate.

Mr. Dahlberg has not been an avowed candidate and does not figure in the list of five active aspirants classified as "satisfactory" by the league. The attitude of the league toward the Dahlberg candidacy is not yet disclosed. The feeling exists that substantial help will have to come from Supt. McBride of the league, in putting the downstate Republicans into line for the Chicago man, and upon whether such aid is to be forthcoming is largely dependent the possibility of a speakership deadlock.

The full strength of the incoming state administration moves upon Springfield tonight to launch officially the Dahlberg campaign. Mr. Small, himself, will go to the capital for the speakership fight. Col. Smith departs this afternoon for Springfield and the two will handle personally the downstate end of the contest. Senator Ettelson and his lieutenants go to Springfield this evening. Their task is to convince the Chicago city hall representatives, nearly solidly wet, that they should support a recognized dry. When it is recalled that seventeen Republicans stayed out of the 1915 caucus rather than to be bound to vote for a dry as the caucus nominee, the size of the undertaking may be estimated.

No Democratic Choice.

The Cook county Democratic members have determined to go into their caucus Tuesday night, unpledged to any candidate for minority leader. Ferdinand A. Garesche of Madison is now figured as out in front for this post and is expected to be the caucus nominee.

BRITAIN CATCHING UP ON BABIES TO ANNUL WAR TOLL

[Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.]
[Copyright: 1921.]

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The registrar general's 1919 report for England and Wales contains figures dealing with infant deaths suggesting that nature or Providence is trying to atone for war losses.

"While the time is hardly ripe yet to attempt an estimate of the total loss of births attributable to the war," the report says, "possibly the number may be somewhere above 500,000 or very similar to that of deaths in active service."

By way of compensation the report shows fewer deaths. Death rates by far the lowest on record are shown for 1919 from measles and whooping cough, while the low death rate from diarrhea has only once been bettered.

The death rate at most ages of life shows a tendency to decline, except in the case of cancer.

The excess of infant deaths in London over the average for the country, noted as an exceptional feature of the 1917 and 1918 figures, has disappeared.

Deaths Exceed Births Here.

MADRID, Jan. 1.—Madrid vital statistics show that during the year deaths exceeded births, the mortality being 17,991, as against 17,758 births.

Finds Counterfeiters' Press on Bed of Ocean

Providence, R. I., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—United States Secret Service Agent Owen R. McKenna of Boston has recovered from the bottom of the ocean a quarter of a mile from shore at Long Meadow, fifteen miles from here, a 350 pound printing press, which, it is alleged, was used by counterfeiters.

Two former Providence policemen, now prosperous real estate dealers, are under arrest and a search is being made for another alleged counterfeiter.

BETTER, CARDINAL GIBBONS ENJOYS A RESTFUL DAY

Cheered by Message of President Wilson.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 1.—Cardinal Gibbons was cheered tonight by a message of sympathy received from President Wilson and it was reported at the home of Robert T. Shriver at Union Mills, where he has been confined during his illness, that he was much improved over his condition yesterday.

The message sent by the President's secretary, Jos. P. Tumulty, to bishop Owen B. Corrigan was as follows:

"The President has learned with sympathy and distress, of the Cardinal's illness, and hopes that he may very soon hear of a decided turn for the better."

Sends It to Secretary.

The bishop had the message passed to the Cardinal's secretary, the Rev. Albert E. Smith, at Mr. Shrivers' home, who transmitted it to the cardinal.

The president was sent a telegram from Cardinal Gibbons, which said:

"From my sickbed I send you my heartfelt thanks for your solicitude in my regard, and I pray God may bring you every blessing in this new year."

Feels Like New Man.

The cardinal awoke this morning from a refreshing sleep "feeling like a new man" according to Father Smith. He spent the day quietly but pleasantly, with no alarming sinking spells and with nothing to excite him. No visitors were allowed to see him.

It was hoped that he would be able to sleep well tonight also, and those in attendance on him were greatly encouraged, although they realize that his condition still was dangerous and liable to another sudden turn for the worse as yesterday.

800 UNEMPLOYED SLEEP IN CHURCH IN NEW YORK CITY

New York, Jan. 1.—Eight hundred homeless and unemployed men started the new year by sleeping in the pews of one of New York's most historic churches—St. Mark's in the Bowery.

The men, part of a crowd of more than 1,000, met in a Bowery hall on New Year's eve, and planned to break into the church for the night's lodging if admittance was refused them. But when they approached the ancient edifice in Second avenue, they found it brilliantly illuminated and the rector, Dr. William Norman Guthrie, waiting for them, with an invitation to come inside.

Dr. Guthrie told the men he had made arrangements to give them a substantial breakfast. There was no disorder and the men listened with respectful attention to an address by the clergyman, in which he said no Christian minister "in his senses" could refuse to yield an emergency shelter.

St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church, located almost in the heart of the lower east side, was organized in 1791. In a crypt underneath the church is buried the body of Gov. Peter Stuyvesant, one of the Dutch governors of old New York.

CHARGES GREEN MILL RAIDERS BEAT PRISONER

U. S. Dry Chief Plans to Investigate.

Charges that federal prohibition agents who raided the Green Mill Gardens, Lawrence avenue and Broadway, on New Year's eve, assaulted a prisoner, knocking him down twice and severely bruising him, and created excitement by the flourish of revolvers, which caused several women to faint, will be investigated by Chief Prohibition Agent Frank D. Richardson today.

Robert Springsguth, 1700 Clybourn avenue, who was still a prisoner in the Summerdale police station, exhibited a badly battered forehead and a swollen jaw in support of his story. He wore a tuxedo as he related his experience from behind the bars.

"I intend to ask for an injunction closing the Green Mill Gardens," said Prohibition Agent Richardson. "The request will be based on the purchase of a pint of whisky from a head waiter on Wednesday. It was on this evidence of liquor selling that the search warrant used New Year's eve was obtained. If any agent beat up a prisoner or used unduly rough methods I will discharge him if the charges are proven."

Girl Corroborates Charges.

Springsguth's story is corroborated by Miss Edythe Ahern, 1165 Lawrence avenue, who was seated with him at a table on the second floor in a section known as the annex.

"We were eating when the raid began," Springsguth said. "Two men wearing caps rushed up to the table. They flourished guns. One of them grabbed me. I said, 'Who are you? What authority have you?' They showed me their badges and I sat down. The crowd around was jeering.

"I had my hands on the back of a chair when they seized me and led me down stairs to a room in the basement next to the boiler. I was there only a short time, when a big fellow who wore no coat asked, 'Where is the fellow that has been making all the trouble?' I was pointed out. He knocked me down twice. Other agents stood close by. When I went down I was kicked. My face shows I wasn't getting a massage.

Dozen Others Also Held.

"There were about a dozen other prisoners held there with me for more than two hours, after which we were taken to the station."

"That's just what happened," said Miss Ahern.

Witnesses said when the raiders first made arrests about a dozen men were assembled together at one side of an exit on the main floor. Agent Callahan went to the basement. After more than an hour had elapsed the agents guarding the prisoners left them and started a search for Callahan. Meantime the "prisoners" went back to their tables. Some, it is said, left the place.

Callahan asked where the prisoners were and ordered their rearrest. As they were rearrested they were taken to the basement. They were led through the kitchen, through several passageways, and finally through the engine room, and placed in a storeroom in which there was a stock of wines and liquors under government seal.

Not a Nice Prison.

Just outside of the door through which the even dozen in full dress were led stood several large galvanized iron garbage cans filled with refuse. A sturdy stoker was putting it through an incinerating process while the government men sweltered, argued, and fought with the prisoners.

Finally the patrol wagons arrived and a sweltering, soot streaked group emerged into the night air, finding the change agreeable. Collars were crumpled, shirt bosoms wilted, faultlessly tailored suits were streaked with ashes and daubs from contact with dust laden shelves in the "wine cellar" and the refuse cans.

Among the prisoners was Anthony Regeant, a waiter. He said yesterday that he witnessed the slugging of Springsguth.

Mystery Bottle of Wine.

"I worked at the Mills for the first time that night as an extra man," said Regeant, who also was wearing his tuxedo. "I was arrested when an agent stopped me as I was about to leave with a satchel with my clothes in it. I shared a locker with another waiter. When the agent asked to see the satchel I complied. He found a quart of wine in it.

"I never saw it before. Just then, Henry, my friend, came up. 'Lock me up, I put that bottle in there. A lady kicked it out from under a table and I picked it up. I meant to put it in my own satchel.'"

"I stand to lose about $4,000 through unpaid meal checks and refunds I will have to make people locked out of here New Year's eve," said Tom Chamales, proprietor of the Green Mills. "There is no mystery about the passageway leading from the basement to a nearby drugstore. The corner was formerly a bar and, when it was, the passageway was used. It has not been used since."

War Bonus to Miners Stopped in Pennsylvania

Clearfield, Pa., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Coal operators in the central Pennsylvania district have decided to stop paying the miners a bonus to stimulate production. The bonus was used practically ever since the days of the war. The general slump in business throughout the country has had an effect on the coal business, causing an overproduction.

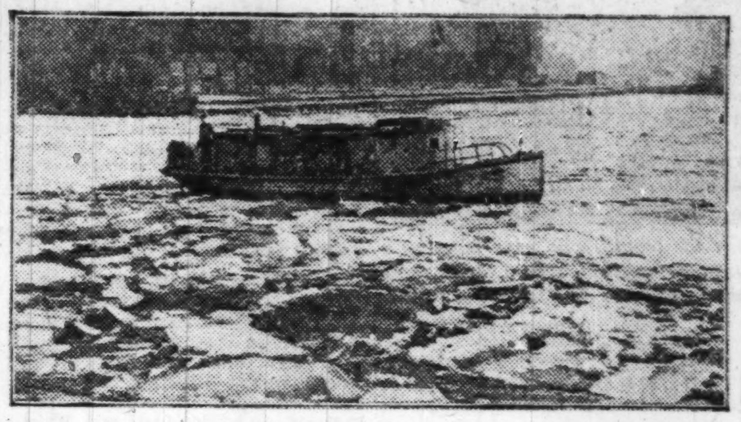
Jackie and Boy Friend Booked in Robbery Case

Timothy Carney, 22 years old, 6945 South Green street, a jackie at the Great Lakes Naval Training station, and James Prendergast, 17 years old, 6942 South Green street, a school boy, who were arrested early Thursday morning by the Englewood police, were booked on two charges of robbery yesterday. They were captured after they had attempted to hold up Albert E. [illegible], 904 West Sixty-second street.

AND ALL ON JANUARY 1!

These are some of the things that make California so jealous of Chicago in that little matter of climate. At the left one sees Tom O'Malley and his daughter Evelyn enjoying a romp in the lush Chicago grasses of Jan. 1. At the right—and spring itself could do no better in the matter of nifty scenery—little Mary O'Malley is attempting to climb one of our forest giants, stimulated thereto by our balmy and invigorating air.

Milder weather sports are the fashion in Chicago these days. Left to right—Francis Baker, Irving Marvin, Jack Tysold and Katherine Baker use a bicycle to test the odd theory that there may perchance be a last straw that will break the back of a camel—or a "bike."



Ah, but this tells a vastly different story. Evidently Chicago's thunderstorm weather—yes, we had one—failed to reach its river, as this tugboat is the prisoner of an ice jam in that historic stream. Really, the ice is a faux pas, as it were, and should have been shoved out of the picture. But it's nice warm ice.

WRANGEL SEEKS GERMAN FRIEND, WHO IS MISSING

[Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.]
[Copyright: 1921.]

BERLIN, Jan. 1.—Gen. Wrangel, former commander of the anti-bolshevist forces in South Russia, while in Berlin en route to Paris stopped at the Hotel Continental. There he hoped to find his comrade and confidant, Gen. Trautenberg, who, however, had disappeared.

Toward midnight a few days previously the guests of the Hotel Continental were awakened by shrieks from the rooms occupied by Gen. Trautenberg and his wife and baby. Police broke into the apartment. There sat the general on a bed with a revolver in his hand swearing he would kill himself, while his wife and child wept. It was impossible to learn what had occurred or why the general threatened to commit suicide, except that it was due to some political motive.

Next morning Gen. Ulrich von Hoffman of Brest-Litovsk fame had a lengthy consultation with Von Trautenberg, which seemed to calm the latter. At noon Trautenberg paid his bill and left the hotel with his family, saying he intended to move to a certain hotel where friends awaited him. Trautenberg never arrived there, nor could he be found at any other hotel when inquiries were made after Wrangel's arrival. Gen. von Hoffman also has left Berlin.

U. S. STORE FAILS; CAN'T COMPETE WITH INDUSTRY

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—The coöperative store for treasury department employés, opened in October, 1919, has closed for liquidation, leaving the 4,500 members who have stood by the enterprise facing a loss in the final settlement.

Of the original membership of 6,200, 1,700 have withdrawn, saving their $5 membership fees, but accountants now at work doubt the possibility of liquidating the remaining memberships at their face value after outside obligations have been taken care of.

The store, it is explained, did not receive the necessary support and coöperation from the membership, nor was it possible for it to compete with local chain stores, which offered many commodities, particularly canned goods, at lower cost.

Venizelists Are Walloped Again by Election Board

ATHENS, Dec. 31.—The Smyrna vote in the recent elections has been annulled by the court of elections. The decision means a material alteration in the complexion of the chamber of deputies, lessening the number of Venizelists.

WE RISE TO GIVE A FEW REMARKS ON OUR CLIMATE

Bathing Beauts Upon Jan. 1, Etc., Etc.

If, as the gentleman from California arose to observe during an elegiac interlude at the bier of the deceased, if those present have a spare moment we will now utter a few words about climate:

It was at State and Washington streets. They were fair to gaze upon, they were in one piece bathing suits, and they stood in maiden meditation, fancy free. One was a blonde, the other a brunette. But no one gazed thereat, because——

It was at Michigan boulevard and Congress street. They had just emerged from the matinée. One was bundled in a Kolinsky wrap, with toque, muff, and choker, and the other's mink dolman topped a pair of nifty goloshes with fur anklets. But no one gazed thereat, because——

It was Jan. 1 in Chicago—the good old summer time, with a bit of spring tossed in for embellishment. A robin redbreast trilled a lusty roundelay in the willow tree beside the Garfield Park conservatory, Patrolman Paddy Nolan reported; a butterfly flew into Nick the Greek's news kiosk in the Argyle L station, and in Lincoln park they let the dickcissel out to take the benediction of the air. It was the first time in the history of the zoo that the dickcissel had ventured forth between the last rose of summer and the flowers that bloom in the spring, tra la.

O, Yes, Swimming, Too.

While these events were transpiring and folks were sauntering about in the lush grass of the parks and preserves, a few footprints on the sands were being made by north shore mermen. A. E. Neuffer, 4236 School street, and John Reid, 2533 Colyer street, hung their clothes on a hickory limb at Winona street and enjoyed a zestful dip. They felt bashful, they said, because it was the first time they had appeared in bathing suits this year.

But speaking about climate. The maximum temperature yesterday was 49 at 7 a. m. It remained around that mark throughout the day. At 8 o'clock at night the reading was 42. You will recall that it was much warmer Jan. 1 of 1876, the maximum for the day being 65. Other New Year's day maximum temperatures are: 1890, 54; 1892, 55; 1897, 57; 1905, 48. Incidentally, the chilliest New Year we ever had was in 1887—6 below zero.

And a Thunder Storm!

Then there is the thunder storm. That came at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The weather bureau reported it was the first ever recorded for New Year's day. Mr. Haines counted the peals. There were two of them, he said, and some snappy lightning, before the gentle rain descended in bales. In more unfortunate climes these meteorological visitors drop only in summer and spring.

Let's see: we left the bathing beauties basking at State and Washington streets. They're still there, in a show window, doubtless soliloquizing that the winter of our discontent is now made glorious summer by this sun of ours.

HASTEN TO ASK U. S. PERMIT FOR POWER PROJECTS

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Included in 134 applications thus far received by the federal water power commission for permits or licenses under the water power act passed by congress last June are one from Illinois, one from Wisconsin and three from Minnesota.

Twenty-seven states are represented in the list of applications, 35 of the 134 coming from California, 13 from New York, 12 from the state of Washington, and 10 from Montana.

The application from Illinois is from the state itself for a license for navigation and power projects in the Desplaines and Illinois rivers in connection with the waterway now under construction.

River Forest Firemen Give Dance for Club Fund

Firemen of the River Forest volunteer fire department cleared the station floor New Year's eve, hired a jazz band, and celebrated the incoming year with a benefit dancing party for the purpose of raising funds to establish clubrooms in the village hall. The men have already raised $600 in the last few months and have been donated a pool and billiard table by Frederick Lawley, 67 Franklin street, River Forest. The party was in charge of Fire Chief Herman Schoff.

GIRL'S FATHER HURLS LAMP AND SWAIN SHOOTS

Giacoma Costa adjusted his Christmas tie, tilted his Sunday derby at a bit of a cavalier angle, and, holding the nosegay firmly in his right hand rapped at the front door of the apartment of Carmen Dimingo, 1019 Lytle street. Mr. Dimingo opened the door. Mr. Costa extracted a tin foiled cigar from his upper vest pocket, presented it, smiled, and said:

"Good day, Mr. Dimingo. It's fine weather, eh?"

"Is it?" said Mr. Dimingo, but he escorted Mr. Costa to the parlor, where sat Marie Dimingo, his 18 year old daughter. Mr. Costa tendered her the nosegay. She smiled understandingly.

"Mr. Dimingo," beamed Mr. Costa, "I have the honor—I—that is we—I want to marry your daughter."

"You do, eh?" said Mr. Dimingo fingering the parlor lamp. The next moment it was hurtling through the air. It struck Mr. Costa in the midriff and bore him to the floor. He arose, reached for his hip pocket, and said:

"She'll be mine or we'll die together."

He opened fire. Mr. Dimingo and Marie vanished through a rear door. None of the bullets hit them. The police took Mr. Costa to the Desplaines street station.

"I'll marry him when he gets out," sobbed Marie.

SOVIET RUSSIA OUTCZARS CZAR, TRAVELER SAYS

J. H. Rubens of Milwaukee, who was in Russia from October, 1919, to October, 1920, in the interests of American manufacturers, dropped into Chicago yesterday to tell the world that the Lenin soviet regime has outczared the czar—and then some.

"I feel the menace of this soviet form of government so keenly," said Mr. Rubens, "that I intend to spend the next year going about warning the American people at my own expense.

"Business? There is no business. Starvation is on every hand. The people are sick of it all—only the power of the Red army keeps them from overthrowing Lenin and his crowd.

"From the peasant on his ruined farm to the private in the Red army, all tell me they are praying to end the rule of Lenin. The day the Red army is demobilized will mark the beginning of the end of Lenin. And Lenin knows it. That's why he would rather keep a few small wars on hand than have general peace.

"The army would have revolted long ago, but its discipline is not iron but steel."

BUBBLE BREAKS, SCREEN STRUCK GIRLS OUT CASH

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 1.—Dreams of becoming cinema stars are being shattered today in the minds of scores of girls throughout the middle west as a result of the bursting of an alleged promotion bubble here known as the International Pictures corporation.

The scheme, according to federal officers, was simple. An advertisement placed in an eastern theatrical magazine asked for chorus girls and leads. The answers came quickly and then, on beautifully engraved stationery, the applicants were told a tale of a trip to California, a chartered yacht that was to sail the south seas, drop anchor at Egypt, and cruise European waters. The only requisite was a deposit of $50 to "keep away curiosity seekers."

The money came in plentifully; then came the sleuths.

"KEEP SWORD SHARP," GERMAN WAR CHIEF'S MESSAGE TO ARMY

BERLIN, Jan. 1.—In his New Year's message to the army, Maj. Gen. von Seecht, the German commander in chief, refers to the necessity of the soldiers devoting themselves wholly to their calling.

"We will keep our sword sharp and our shield untarnished," says the message. "Inspired by such a true conception of honor and of patriotism, and by this feeling of responsibility, the new army will be able to rival the old in efficiency.

"As an active, living member of the whole body of the nation it will show itself worthy and will gain and keep the esteem and affection of all. Even after the abolition of general conscription the army must and will thus remain a real national army."

CONSTANTINE IS HARD UP; SEEKS YANKEE LOAN

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—The fate of King Constantine of Greece may be decided by the United States government. Withdrawal of Anglo-French financial support, it is said, makes the Greek exchequer so low the government might not be able to "carry on" two months longer, and an American loan is sought.

The expedition in Asia Minor, operating against the Turkish Nationalists, constitutes an embarrassing drain on the treasury, but for political reasons these forces cannot be recalled.

It is understood the entire sum of money made available to Greece through American governmental loans never has been drawn, and that the Greek government is appealing to the United States for another advance.

GIRL GUEST AT MORRISON TAKES ACID; MYSTERY

Hides Identity, Begs Chance to Live.

The police and house detectives at the Hotel Morrison are attempting to solve the riddle of the identity of a pretty blonde woman guest who tried to die on New Year's eve, but failed.

The mystery had its start when the telephone rang in the room of Dr. Francis W. Jiroch, the hotel physician. A few words, barely articulate, were heard by the physician, including a reference to "room 899."

Hurrying to the room, Dr. Jiroch found the woman. She could not talk, but pointed to a bottle beside her bed. Her mouth was badly burned by acid. Dr. Jiroch gave a strong antidote.

Tracing the room number through the clerk, the physician found the room was engaged under the names "Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Palmer, 1216 State street, Rockford, Ill." But the room clerk said he had not seen the husband.

Deserted, Woman Says.

When Dr. Jiroch returned to the room his patient, who is about 20 years old, was able to talk.

"My husband deserted me; I did not wish to live," she said.

She hesitated. Then: "But that was New Year's eve. Now thoughts of the New Year have given me life. Please, please doctor save my life. I wish another chance."

The physician told her she probably would live, but insisted that she "tell him the truth."

Through long distance communication with Rockford the hotel office had been apprised that a Mrs. Charles J. Kurtz lived at the Rockford address given. It was said the Kurtzes have a daughter, Loretta, who answered the description of the young woman at the Morrison and that she formerly lived at 6141 Greenwood avenue, Chicago, but had recently changed her address.

"No, no, I am Mrs. Palmer," the young woman insisted. "I gave a false address. I am not Miss Kurtz." She denied she ever had lived at the Greenwood address.

Still More Mystery.

Another element of mystery was added to the case when Dr. L. F. McClenathan, resident physician of another hotel, said he had been called by a "Mrs. Palmer" yesterday morning at 9 o'clock and had come to the hotel and administered an antidote.

The young woman refused to receive a nurse or to tell hotel attaches her plans should she live.

INVISIBLE CHOIR STIRS CHURCH AT PAXTON, ILL.

Boy's Wireless Carries Christmas Carols.

Champaign, Ill., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Mysterious Christmas carols, apparently floating through the air and lodging in the vicinity of a Paxton, Ill., Lutheran church congregation at a service early Christmas morning, were explained today when it became known that Clarence Lundeen, 16 year old wireless student, had been experimenting with a wireless phonograph connection.

While the church service was in progress Christmas morning members of the congregation were startled when an apparently invisible choir broke forth with a program of Christmas carols rendered in a technique the like of which had never been heard in Ford county.

Cause Is Located.

Under difficulties the service was continued, but an investigation was thought advisable and the high school experimenter was located.

Lundeen, it was learned, had been experimenting with the musical possibilities of wireless telegraphy, and for weeks, by his wire instruments, had been enjoying music produced in various sections of Illinois and Indiana. This suggested to him the idea of something original for Paxton Christmas morning.

He ran a set of wires from a phonograph in his home to an amplifier in his workshop, and from the shop to a sensitive receiver which he had placed in a large phonograph horn concealed in a tree in the neighborhood of the church.

With connections properly made, he started the phonograph in his home, and the music it produced was thrown out of the horn some distance from the house. The church was in a direct line with the sound from the horn, and for this reason the concert seemed directly above the congregation.

A thorough search was made by a number of Paxton citizens in an effort to locate the source of music, but so well did Lundeen have his instruments concealed that discovery of the mystery was impossible for several days, and the "phantom music" was the talk of the town.

D'Annunzio Returns War Decorations Given by Italy

ROME, Jan. 1.—Gabriele d'Annunzio, as a means of showing his contempt for his native land, has sent back to King Victor Emmanuel of Italy all the decorations he won during the world war as an aviator, it was learned today. When the soldier-poet surrendered Fiume recently to the Italian government forces, he issued a statement repudiating his allegiance to Italy and declaring its abandonment of the Fiumians had made it unworthy of his citizenship.

CROOKS TO FACE HARDEST YEAR, HUGHES PLEDGE

Cites High Efficiency of Sleuth Squads.

Chief of Detectives Michael Hughes gave out a New Year's greeting to Chicago's criminals—those not already in jail.

"Nineteen twenty-one is going to be the hardest year the crooks ever saw in Chicago," was the message.

"If the records of my men continue to be as gratifying as they have been since I started my work under Chief Fitzmorris' direction on Oct. 9 we will clear the city of criminals," said Hughes.

According to statistics that he gave out, the fifteen squads of detectives and sergeants working under his direction have accomplished more in the way of cleaning up the city since Oct. 9 than was accomplished during the entire preceding six months.

Here Are the "Champs."

The December efficiency list is headed by the squad under Lieut. William H. Shoemaker, which includes Sergt. Michael Grady and Detective Sergeants Joseph Ronan, Patrick O'Neill, and William Carter. They are accredited 702 points. They made 550 arrests during the month and recovered $33,000 worth of stolen property. Their most important feat was the rounding up of the Thomas Heavey band, members of which staged the attempted holdup of the Ashland pharmacy that resulted in the fatal shooting of Heavey and the murder of Policeman C. R. Conlon.

Members of the Heavey gang were found to include William Bickel, Frank Jordan, Albert Franzen, William Laporte, Thomas Fitzgerald, Walker Brownley and James Grady. Only the last three are still at large. Bickel made confessions which cleared up nineteen holdups of oil stations and eleven others. He and Jordan have been indicted for murder in connection with the shooting of Policeman Conlon.

Six Arrest 400 Criminals.

The second on the efficiency list is the squad comprising Lieut. John W. Norton, Fred Tapscott, Michael McFadden, Patrick Roach, Alex. Gasperik and Joseph Hacksa, detective sergeants. They received 551 points of merit, and arrested about 400 criminals. They are accredited with solving three murders and arresting the slayers.

The third squad includes Detective Sergeants William Cusack, Charles Gratten, William O'Neill and William Knowles; they have been working in a squad for only two weeks, but have accomplished enough to put them in third rank, the chief said.

Chief Hughes gave honorable mention to his "cleanup" squad, Detective Sergeants Richard T. Piper, Charles Essig, Frank Smith and Charles Welling. They captured three gangs of holdup men.

PENROSE FIGHTS FARMER TARIFF; DEFEAT LIKELY

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Opposition by Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania, chairman of the senate finance committee, to the passage of the emergency agricultural tariff bill at this session is expected to mean that little further effort will be made to put the house bill through the senate.

When it became evident the bill could not be rushed through the senate before Christmas, immediately following its passage in the house, its sponsors practically abandoned any hope of favorable action. In view of this situation it has been agreed that the only possibility of any action in advance of general revision of the tariff lay in the proposed reënactment of the Payne-Aldrich bill as a temporary measure at the beginning of the special session in March.

The course followed with the emergency agricultural tariff bill is likely to be much the same as in the cases of the tariff bills passed by the house last spring.

550 ARRESTS IN MONTH

The Chicago detective squad that captured first place on the December efficiency list by making a record of 550 arrests and $33,000 worth of stolen property recovered for the month. Sitting, left to right—Sergt. Mike Grady, Lieut. William H. Shoemaker. Standing, left to right—Detective Sergeants Joseph Ronan, Patrick O'Neil, and William Carter.

BRITISH-RUSSIA TRADE WAITS ON PASSPORTS LIFT

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The Sunday Times' diplomatic correspondent states that a trade agreement between Great Britain and Russia has been drafted and is ready for signatures by representatives of both countries. He says M. Krassin, contrary to reports, is not prepared to leave the country before an understanding is reached and is personally negotiating for final terms with Sir Robert Horne.

The correspondent states that Russian trade experts, who are able to give details as to Russia's requirements, are refused passports by the British foreign office. As an example of this, one man, versed in the knowledge of Russian railway transportation and formerly in charge of the czar's train, was not allowed to come to England.

As another example he cites that the motor trucks at Slough, which must be sold before the motor truck industry in England can be resumed, could be sold to Russia if an expert were allowed to come to England for negotiations.
England for negotiations.

Concluding, he says Germany is eager to make friends with Russia, and England, in order to prevent this, must resume trade relations with Russia immediately.

Musical Instruments and Servants Taxed in Paris

PARIS, Jan. 1.—From today every Parisian who owns a piano or keeps a servant must pay an extra tax for the privilege. Grand pianos and organs will cost 60 frans a year, twice as much as uprights, and harmoniums 60 francs. The householder has to pay 40 francs for each woman servant and 80 francs for a footman or butler.

REFUSES BANQUET; WANTS MONEY TO GO TO HUNGRY EUROPE

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—The Rev. Charles B. Schrantz president emeritus of St. Charles College, a Catholic institution near here, has refused to join in a celebration and banquet in his honor, prepared by the Sulpician priests on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination, because, he said, "I will not join in any celebration as long as there are starving people in Europe."

Because of his attitude the celebration was abandoned, although priests and bishops were expected from all over the country, and 1,000 priests, who had been under his instruction, wished to make a formal avowal of their gratitude.

Father Schrantz said the times were "too sad and too bad," for the celebration of even a golden jubilee. The money which would be required, he said, "could be so much better employed for the relief of the heart rending distress of thousands upon thousands of our fellow men who are literally dying from cold, hunger, and despair."

COP KILLS MAN WHO REFERRED TO HIM AS "PIKER"

New York, Jan. 1.—[Special.]—"Go on, pay for it—don't be a piker," Henry Deavy called to Acting Detective Sergeant John P. O'Neill in a Second avenue restaurant tonight. Sergt. O'Neill had ordered ham and eggs, and as the waitress brought them in he left, declaring that bread and butter he ate while waiting for the rest of his dinner had been plenty.

A fight followed Deavy's remark. When the door of the restaurant was locked on him Sergt. O'Neill is declared to have crashed in the plate glass with his fists, drew his revolver, and shot Deavy dead. He is held on a charge of murder.

O'Neill's police record heretofore was good. He is married and has two children.

19 HOLDUPS AS YEAR COMES IN; TWO MEN SHOT

Gambling Raids of Day Net Eighty-two.

Nineteen holdups yesterday ushered in the new year. One man was shot by robbers and a man was shot by the police when he ran away from policemen.

The robberies netted the bandits little.

Eighty-two persons were taken in gambling raids.

Officials at the county hospital reported twenty-three persons suffering from stab wounds, bullet wounds, and injuries received in automobile accidents had been taken to the hospital within twenty-four hours ending last night. This is a record during the last few years, officials say.

The man shot in a holdup was Charles Baskovic, a blacksmith of Lyons, Ill., who came to the city to see the new year in. He reported that he was walking near Twenty-second street and Ashland avenue when two men accosted him. He refused to obey their commands to hold up his hands, and was shot in the left leg. His assailants fled.

The other man, who was shot while the police of the Marquette station were searching four suspects at Eighteenth street and Ashland avenue, was James Marvin of 1659 West Nineteenth street. Policeman George Draut of the searching party told him to halt, but instead he ran. He was shot through both legs.

Bandits Quickly Caught.

Two youthful bandits were taken into custody and were on their way to the police station within five minutes after they had held up and robbed Robert Kick of West Hammond, and Bruno Lyenuski of Burnham, at One Hundred and Thirty-seventh street and Reynard avenue. Immediately after the robbery Kick hurried into a drug store and called the police. A block from the holdup the police halted the bandit car and arrested Harry Phtric, Frank Herbert and Fred Beek.

Leonard Maloney, 38 years old, 1408 North Kildare avenue, was captured by the Austin police in the back yard of his home by the police last night after he had held up five men of $7 and two watches at Lemoyne and North Kildare. Maloney confessed.

Louis "Jack" Mason, 4614 South Paulina street, who battled "Knock-Out" Brown to a draw a week ago, was found in a semi-conscious condition at West Forty-sixth and South Paulina streets last night. Mason told the police he was returning to his home when an automobile containing six men drove up to the curb. One of the men leaned out of the car and struck him on the head with a club, after which they took $155 from him.

Wounded with Buckshot.

Five minutes after the new year had been sounded Joseph Sharkey, 18 years old, 940 West Thirty-fourth street, and his friend, John Wren, the same age, were shot in the back. They had progressed but three blocks from a dance at Archer hall. Dr. A. M. Sheier, 3101 South Morgan street, to whom they applied for treatment, told the police he had extracted twenty-nine buckshot from their backs. Sharkey was taken to the Woman's hospital for treatment, while the police are searching for Wren.

Another victim of a mysterious assault New Year's was William Burnett, 35 years old, a Negro living at 3651 South Dearborn street. He died of stab wounds yesterday at the Provident hospital. The Stanton avenue police are searching for another Negro named Charles Branch.

Charles Caluwaert, 215 South Kenilworth avenue, reported to the police that while a dance was going full swing in his home last night, an automobile drove in front of the place and a shot was fired. He said he was on the porch at the time and the shot barely missed his head. The Oak Park police arrived to find the guests in a panic.

Hit by Neighbor's Bullet.

Joseph Girnas, 2725 South Whipple street, was accidentally shot through the left hand by John Calirs, a neighbor, during a New Year's celebration in front of the Girnas home.

Dolores Bolavis Garcia, a Mexican, was wrestling with Miss Angela Lopis at 1527 West Fourteenth street for possession of a .22 caliber rifle when the weapon was discharged and Garcia was shot through the right leg. He was taken to the county hospital.

The pictures of Samuel M. Hamilton and Henry T. Chace were transposed in yesterday's TRIBUNE and Mr. Hamilton's picture was erroneously labeled "Samuel Hilton."

In THE TRIBUNE of Dec. 24 appeared the statement that Charles D. Seymour Jr., and his father, who conducts a stock broker's business in Gary, had left Gary suddenly when a woman sued them for $500. Mrs. Charles D. Seymour denies such a suit was filed or that the absence of her husband and son from Gary had anything to do with the matter.

TAB ON CROOKS BY REGISTRATION TO BE TAKEN UP

European System Is Suggested for Chicago.

Establishment of a "Who's Who in Crime" through the registration of all persons between the ages of 16 and 70 has been proposed to the Chicago crime commission by William L. McKee of 4728 Kenwood avenue, an examiner in the county recorder's office.

The plan will be discussed at the Jan. 11 meeting of the commission. The registration would be fashioned after the European police systems of recording the age, the birthplace, last and present residence, occupation and place of employment of permanent as well as transient residents of communities.

Tells of Benefits.

"The large cities of the United States have from 700 to 900 per cent more crime than the large cities over there," said Mr. McKee. "It may not be necessary to make the system here as drastic, but it will prevent crime when the crook realizes that the law knows who he is, where he may be found, what he is doing for a living, and the people will know whether their next door neighbor is a porch climber or a useful citizen.

"Every good citizen is registered now. To vote, he is required to repeat the process every two to four years or oftener, if he moves. Under the system suggested it would necessary to register only when one moves."

Mr. McKee would make the registration national in scope, so that criminals could be traced from one city to another.

Wants Federal Order.

"If a presidential order could be issued to protect the country from a foreign foe, if the public utilities commission can void a contract between the street railways and the people in the name of police regulation, why canno the president, the governor, or the mayor issue an order for registration until legislation can be enacted?" Mr McKee continued.

"I am convinced that such action would prevent the murder and robbery of many citizens. If Chicago will lead the rest of the country would follow."

COLONY OF N. Y. "400" LOCATES ON EAST SIDE

Social Pendulum Swings Back 100 Years.

New York, Jan. 1.—[Special.]—After an absence of more than three-quarters of a century from the far east side, a number of residents of the Fifth avenue district are once more setting up firesides on the brink of the East river.

When James Monroe was president residence on the East river front was a mark of affluence. Later the inland locations, especially Fifth avenue, became the center of social life.

Now a group of well known society people has become interested in a little cluster of homes in the shadow of Queensboro bridge, on Sutton place, a little and comparatively unknown place.

Eighteen Houses in the Group.

There are eighteen houses in the cluster acquired, forming the east front of Sutton place from Fifty-seventh to Fifty-eighth street and the south side of the Fifty-eighth street block from Sutton place over to the river, a right angle formation. The area behind the formation is an open space, once a beautiful garden.

Will Face a Garden.

Each house is to be turned around by rearranging the interior. Living rooms, dining rooms, drawing rooms, and master bedrooms will face the garden, which is to be reconstructed. In this way the houses will be isolated from the outside.

The plans of the colony call for an expenditure of $1,250,000.

INO MARINUZZI COFFS AT 'FEUD OF OPERA STARS'

enies French, Italians, and Americans Row.

ino Marinuzzi, artistic director of Chicago Opera association, denied a public statement yesterday that y controversy existed among the nch, Italian, and American artists the opera company.

The statement is too ridiculous for sideration and I am positive all my nds among the French singers will r me out in this," he said.

In the first place I have not been e to discover any controversy among French, Italian, and American ar- s. Their relations are most cor- l and they appear to me to be as big, happy family.

He's For Americans.

When I took over the artistic man- ment of the Chicago Opera associa- I thoroughly understood that it an international institution, and intend, to the best of my ability, keep it as such.

Herbert M. Johnson, executive di- tor of the company, is indeed a man rare managerial ability, who stands absolute justice in every regard. hough an American in every fiber, is decidedly in favor of artistic cognition regardless of nationality. rsonally, I am decidedly in favor of erican singers and composers and, ank goodness, there are many good es here and more and more are veloping every year.

We have investigated the matter roughly and we wish to state posi- ely that there is no dispute between Americans and the Italians in the era association. We would severely nsure any member of our organiza- on, Italian or American, who would deavor to start such a thing.

Cites Debut of Own Opera.

My real appreciation of French and erican artists may be deduced from fact that when I produced my era, "Jacquerie," in Rome I selected American, Edward Johnson, as lead- tenor, and when I produced the rk a few nights ago in Chicago for first time in America I again se- ted Mr. Johnson as the tenor and a ench artist, Yvonne Gall, as the ima donna soprano.

Regarding the extraordinary suc- s of Charles Marshall in "Othello," beg to say that two of the most ased people in the theater were Her- t M. Johnson and myself, as we feel t we are in a measure responsible his great triumph. It is our fondest pe that his success will endure."

Herbert M. Johnson, executive di- ctor of the opera association, also nied the existance of any contro- ersy, but said an artist's personal ress agent had "attempted to stir up rouble for business purposes."

Marshall Is Mum.

Charles Marshall, the American tist whose success in "Othello" is d to have given rise to bitterness ong some of the Italian artists, lled when asked about the contro- rsy.

"I can make no statement," he "I did not know there was a troversy of any kind."

e bowed and begged to be ex- ed from further questioning.

In an adjoining building immigrants will be taught Americanism and an auditorium will be at the service of patriotic societies.

New York Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Persons whose incomes in 1918 were $150,000 or more paid more than one-third of the total income tax collected by the federal government, although their combined incomes were only 4.3 per cent of the total income taxable, the national industrial conference board says.

Persons in $1,000 to $5,000 income class, although their incomes were nearly 60 per cent of the total, paid less than 13 per cent of the tax.

ONCE FORTUNE'S DARLING, COAL OIL JOHNNY DIES

Poor, Rich, Noted, Popular, Poor Again, Forgotten.

Omaha, Neb., Jan. 1.—Fame and money are nothing now to John W. Steele, the "Coal Oil Johnny" of more than fifty years ago. He died of pneumonia yesterday at Fort Crook, where he was station agent for the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad. He died in one of four little rooms back of the station.

But there was a time when his name was in the papers and his pockets were full of money, and it is said that he threw money about a New York street once to see people scramble for it. The money came to him fast and easily. It went faster and still more easily.

The Odyssey of "Coal Oil Johnny."

At the top, "Coal Oil Johnny" had about $500,000, which looked much larger in the eastern cities over fifty years ago than it would today. Here's "The Rise and Fall of 'Coal Oil Johnny.'"

In 1843 he was born at Shakleyville, Pa., and his parents died when he was a small boy. Adopted by Culbertson McClintock, a well to do Venago county farmer, when he was only 7, "Johnny" Steele inherited the farm after the death of McClintock's widow. He kept at work on it until oil was found. Then he began to enjoy royalties from the oil wells. There was plenty of money in sight, but it would take too long to get it that way, he thought. So he sold out and started in to "get something out of life." Lighting cigars with $100 bills was one of his ways. He was liberal to the poor, too, but he did not dodge the limelight.

Likes Song—Gives $1,000.

He liked a song heard in a Pittsburgh, Pa., theater one day. Later calling the singer aside he gave him $1,000.

Steele once bought a Philadelphia hotel, ran it a few days and gave it to a friend.

Then came the big times in New York and elsewhere. He had married and nothing was too good for the bride.

It took only a few years to turn the $500,000 into almost nothing. Steele came west over forty-five years ago to begin again. About thirty-seven years ago he entered the employ of the Burlington. Eight years ago he worked as a truckman for the road at Fort Crook and later became the station agent for the road at that place.

Meanwhile every one forgot "Coal Oil Johnny." Most of his old pals in the east were dead or rich and so he did not mean anything to them. He just plodded along. Maybe sometimes he thought of those who had scrambled for his money in New York and maybe he was glad he had "lived," but it's all one to him now.

Would Sell Mine Stock to Men Who Dig Coal

New York, Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Men working in the anthracite mines have been invited to become partners, through stock purchasing, in the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company, operator of properties in the Panther Creek field. This step, according to the announcement, is the first of its kind in the history of the industry.

POSTAGE DUE UPON PARCEL HALTS QUIZ INTO WIDOW'S DEATH

Postage due on a mysterious package sent from the confectionery store of William Hagley, 134 North Dearborn street, to Mrs. Edna B. Wilson, the pretty young widow who was found dead in a bath tub at her sister's home in Mason City, Ia., shortly after she had returned from a trip to Chicago, is blocking the police of Mason City in their investigation.

MRS. EDNA WILSON. [Hall Photo.]

Postal authorities will not turn the package over to the police until Mrs. Wilson's relatives return from Greene, Ia., where they took her body, claim the package, and pay the postage.

The Chicago police questioned A. J. Sullivan, an employé of the Hawkins Electric company, 1447 West Washington boulevard, regarding the case. He said he had known Mrs. Wilson in Mason City and she had visited him here over the holidays.

"She left Monday night," he said. "I didn't know anything was the matter until Wednesday, when I read she was dead."

Gov. Lowden and Wife Hold Final Reception

HEALTH SHOW'S PROFITS TO PAY FOR NEW CLINICS

Will Care for Children's Teeth and Eyes.

Free dental and optical clinics for children who are too poor to pay a dentist's or ophthalmologist's bills are to be established with the $93,000 net profit of the health and sanitation show held at the Coliseum last November.

The board of directors of the health department school of home and public nursing, under whose auspices the big health show was held, also decided at a meeting in Mayor Thompson's office to increase the number of beds at the school's free hospital, at Ada and Fulton streets from eighteen to twenty-five and to organize the 6,000 graduates of the school into a corps of "baby nurses." They will be asked to see that the birth of every Chicago child is reported to the health department.

The expenditure of the $93,000 will be under the direction of Health Commissioner Robertson, Mayor Thompson, Bishop Samuel Fallows and D. F. Kelly, members of the school's executive committee.

"We will have facilities at the hospital for the care of the eyes, ears, noses, throats and teeth of poor children, but no medical attention will be given unless there is adequate proof that the child's parents are financially unable to pay for it," Dr. Robertson said.

DOMINIONS TO PROTEST TREATY OF BRITISH-JAPS

U. S. Warned of Tokio Naval Holiday.

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Jan. 1.—P. W. Wilson, the New York correspondent of the London Daily News, cables today that leaders of the Republican party in America have agreed with Canada and other British dominions to joint United States-Canadian control of the Pacific under American leadership.

Mr. Wilson says the conversations started before the election and that there is perfect accord between the United States and the British dominions. The agreement includes the use by Canada of American bases on the Pacific.

Mr. Wilson also says: "Denials from London mean nothing. London is not always consulted."

Must Consult England.

A high official in the British foreign office said that there was no reason for disbelieving the report. He also declared such an agreement was natural and, while it must be approved by London to become effective, there is no reason to believe that London would object to such an arrangement.

The home government would welcome such pressure from the colonies which would lead to a naval agreement with America and which would define the attitude of the British empire towards Japan, thereby making easier a refusal to renew the Anglo-Japanese treaty. The treaty will be decided on finally at the British conference of empire in London next May, when, it is expected, the dominions will register an emphatic protest against its renewal.

BEWARE OF JAP TRICK.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, Jan. 1.—"Warn the United States that they must insist on prohibiting the construction of submarines and aeroplanes in any naval holiday undertaken with Japan?" says a French naval authority, whose name, obviously, cannot be mentioned, in an exclusive interview today.

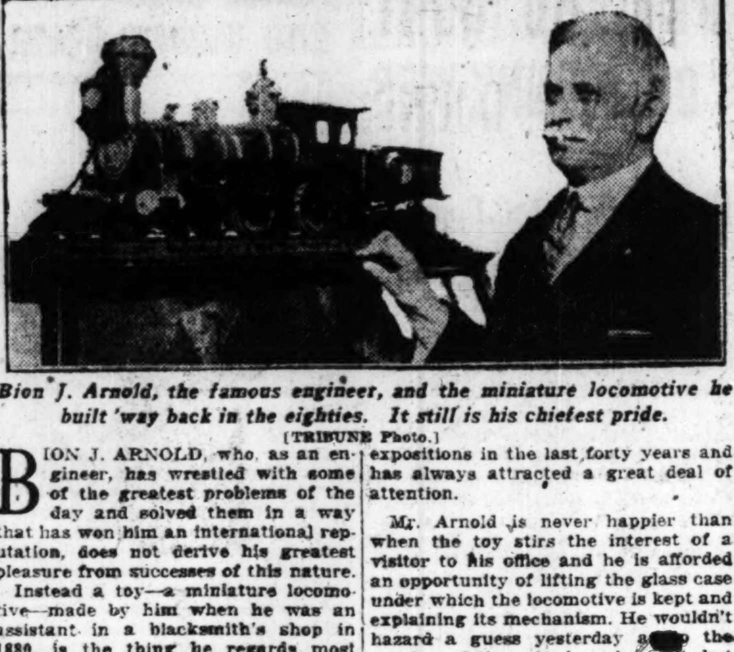
"Japan favors disarmament if it is limited to capital ships because it would stop American construction which Japan cannot overtake.

"Admiral Kato declared that the war taught that battleships of big tonnage having guns of great caliber were the supreme weapons and he wants the Japanese parliament to make appropriations for four post Jutland battleships, four battle cruisers, twelve light cruisers, thirty-seven destroyers, twelve special crafts, and six dredgers, all to be completed before 1927. But Kato does not mention submersibles or aeroplanes.

"The Japanese navy now has two air squadrons, one at Yokosuka and the other at Sasebo. It is contemplated creating, in two years, fifteen new squadrons, one at Maizurm, four at Kure, five at Sasebo, and five at Yokosuka.

"Eighty submarines will be built by 1927. A German type has been adopted."

THE APPLE OF HIS EYE



Bion J. Arnold, the famous engineer, and the miniature locomotive he built 'way back in the eighties. It still is his chiefest pride.
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

BION J. ARNOLD, who, as an engineer, has wrestled with some of the greatest problems of the day and solved them in a way that has won him an international reputation, does not derive his greatest pleasure from successes of this nature.

Instead a toy—a miniature locomotive—made by him when he was an assistant in a blacksmith's shop in 1880, is the thing he regards most highly. It is an exact reproduction of the steam locomotives of the '80s and is run by steam on a miniature track. It has been exhibited at several world's expositions in the last forty years and has always attracted a great deal of attention.

Mr. Arnold is never happier than when the toy stirs the interest of a visitor to his office and he is afforded an opportunity of lifting the glass case under which the locomotive is kept and explaining its mechanism. He wouldn't hazard a guess yesterday a[illegible]o the number of times he has shown it, but an office assistant volunteered the information:

"About a million."

GERMAN "SAINT" FINDS SINNERS AND THEIR LOOT

People Amazed by the Feats He Performs.

BY GEORGE SELDES.

BERLIN, Jan. 1.—The same faith which certain French rest in St. Anthony is shown by the peasantry of Oldenburg toward a living man. His name is Heinrich Ruethemann of the town of Neuenbruck, and he is worshiped as a saint by so many that church attendance throughout the district has fallen off, while crowds throng his cottage.

Was a War Prisoner.

According to the French peasants prayers to Saint Anthony result in recovering lost or stolen property. "Seer Ruethemann," as he calls himself, claims the same power. He says he first became aware of this ability while he was a French prisoner of war, where he easily announced hiding places of missing valuables.

Arriving in Oldenburg Ruethemann surprised the peasantry by numerous feats. Recently a peasant complained that his cow had beeen stolen.

Finds Stolen Cow.

Ruethemann, without going into a trance or resorting to other spiritualist devices, declared the cow was stabled in a certain cross roads farmhouse near a railroad curve and he gave the initials of the thieves. The cow was found and the initials proved to be those of the person who stole it, who was convicted.

The Oldenburg clergy, whose congregations are diminishing, are trying to find means to put the "seer" out of business.

PROMOTION FOR HANDSHEY.

Jugo-Slav Troops Occupy Red Office During Strike

BELGRADE, Jugo-Slavia, Dec. 31.—Government troops today occupied the headquarters of the Communist party throughout Jugo-Slavia to prevent disorders during a twenty-four hour strike called in sympathy with the Communist agitation, which is alleged by the government to be designed to incite uprisings in several towns. The Communist newspaper in Belgrade has been suppressed. Eighty persons, alleged to have had weapons in their homes, have been arrested.

BITTER FRENCH NOTE CONDEMNS BERLIN EVASIONS

Failure to Demobilize Is Angering France.

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Jan. 1.—The French foreign office is hopeful that the British government will send a note to Berlin protesting against Germany's violation of the Spa agreement providing for demobilization by Jan. 1.

The French note to Berlin was couched in the strongest terms, warning Germany that France would take upon herself the right to seize guarantees—meaning an increasing occupation of German territory—because of the violation.

Marshall Foch's report on the execution of the military, naval, and air terms of the agreement was sent to Washington today.

Following an examination of the report, Premier Leygues summoned Marshal Foch for a conference, after which he received Herr Mayer, German ambassador to France.

It is understood Herr Mayer advised M. Leygues not to occupy the Ruhr district and Frankfort, warning him that the population might resist the French troops, causing bloodshed, although no organized resistance would be made.

Contrary to their attitude of last spring, when the French press solidly demanded the occupation of the Ruhr district and Frankfort, the Paris newspapers, although demanding that the government occupy more territory, are pointing to the necessity of an agreement being reached between Quai d'Orsai and Downing street before action is taken.

GERMANY'S NEW YEAR'S WISH IS AMERICAN PEACE

Nation Has High Hopes for 1921.

BY GEORGE SELDES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BERLIN, Jan. 1.—For the third time since the war's end Germany enters a new year with its boundaries uncertain and its fate undecided. But this is the first of the three New Year's days on which the rays of optimism are alight.

During the incoming year Germany hopes she may obtain a revision of the Versailles treaty; a settlement of the amount of her war indemnity, and peace with America.

Hopes for American Peace.

Count von Bernstorff, former American ambassador, contributes the following statement in the National Zeitung's symposium of New Year's expressions which will appear tomorrow: "The only good which Germany can expect from the new year is resumption of normal relations with America. Even in America the pernicious result of the Versailles treaty is made evident by commercial slackness.

"Therefore it is realized that solidarity of the economical interests of all countries demands speedy revision of the Versailles treaty and reformation of the league of nations. President Elect Harding's announcement of his program, which I hope will not remain a paper program like President Wilson's, is gratifying. If Mr. Harding's program is realized, Germany's hope for reconstruction of the fatherland will be realized."

"Work, Don't Wish."

Minister of the Interior Koch declares:

"Wishing won't make Germany well, but working will. But the workers must be paid.

"Under the treaty forced upon Germany against President Wilson's promises there is danger that the workers will not get a living wage. Germany will do what is possible, but it is foolish to believe that Germany can repair or repay all of Europe's losses.

"Germany can work itself up, but not the whole of Europe."

Advises Less Talking.

Karl Friedrich von Siemens, head of Siemensschukers, who has joined with Hugo Stinnes, adds this to the symposium:

"If Germany works more and talks less, she need not fear for the future."

Philip Heinecken, general director of the North German Lloyd company, says:

"The commercial and shipping trades are passing the heaviest crisis in their history, but new life is coming out of the ruins. When the throttling pact of Versailles is changed, the government can replace our lost ships and the seaports of Germany again will flourish."

PARIS, Jan. 1. — Diamonds pearls worth 500,000 francs snatched from a shop window crowded street last evening in full of a guard, who gave chase but to catch the solitary thief.

The man, who is described as dressed and good looking, drove a small auto. He left the engine ning, stepped out of the car, walked straight up to the shop dow.

Several persons saw him standing into the window for a few utes. Then there came a crash.

With a heavy hammer the man shivered the plate glass. In two onds he had helped himself to finest jewels and jumped back into car.

The jeweler, who was celebrating passing of the old year with his ily in a room behind the shop, ran out to see the car speeding down street.

A PRE-INVENTORY SALE

The Annual Pre-Inventory Sale begins tomorrow—and includes all foods put up in tins or jars, besides quite a number of other items as enumerated below.

The foods that are included in this sale are offered at a very material reduction from the regular price—and when it is understood that goods of the character we offer are not plentiful on the market, and, when they can be had, are practically as high priced as they ever were, the advantage of this sale will be apparent.

The market, however, is glutted with cheap goods—but these we do not offer at any price—producers of food like producers in all other lines, found when goods were scarce that they could get practically as much money for inferior grades as they could for the best, and you can imagine what happened—instead of CARE, DECENCY and CONSCIENTIOUS EFFORT regulating the production of many makers—any thing was permissible— and when the demand fell off—and buyers became critical—the market was "a maze" of cheap goods that never were worth anything like the price at which they had been selling.

Good goods and particularly GOOD FOODS are cheap at any price—but this Store has made it a point to sell nothing excepting what it knew to be first class and at a price that no REASONABLE person could take exception to.

CABINET NAMES FORM CASUALTY LIST OF POLITICS

Life at Marion Is Just One Barrage After Another.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Marion, O., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—President Elect Harding is having increasing difficulty in making up his official family. A few days ago he was ready to present to the country the names of at least three men to fill the most important cabinet positions, but new projects and complications have postponed this announcement.

The difficulty of making such decisions and in taking into conference all eager to talk to him may result in delay in his southern trip, planned for the latter part of January and February.

Mr. Harding is being importuned by a lot of men with axes to grind and he is learning daily wisdom of sifting and selecting and getting new viewpoints.

Two "Slain" by Politics.

One of two men it had been practically decided to offer cabinet positions to have been side tracked by the developments of the last few days and the tentative slate still remains tentative.

A "Chicago banker" will be offered the secretaryship of the treasury and it is thought that the decision made a few days ago to put Charles G. Dawes in this place still remains unchanged.

This situation stands for Charles Evans Hughes as secretary of state, but the intimation is that he is more secure than any one else.

The official eraser is handy for all the rest of the slate with the possible exception of John D. Weeks, said to have the strong backing of Senator Lodge.

Enjoys Quiet Holiday.

Senator Harding spent part of the New Year's day in his office with callers, and dined in the evening with Col. George B. Christian, father of his private secretary. He took a long walk in the afternoon with his physician, Dr. C. E. Sawyer.

Next week, he said, would be filled with work; and he has many appointments. It is not likely that any of the prominent Democrats connected with the Wilson administration, such as Robert Lansing or Col. House, will be asked to confer at Marion.

Col. Maurice Connolly, former United States congressman from Iowa and a pilot in the air service during the war, discussed commercial and national defense aviation. Alexander Moore, Pittsburgh publisher, was also here.

1,000 OLD TIME PRINTERS TO GO TO ANNUAL FEAST

More than 700 cable reservations have been recorded by Secretary William Mill for the banquet of the Old-time Printers' association, to be held Jan. 15 at the Hotel La Salle. An attendance of 1,000, the largest in the history of the association, is being provided for.

The big family affair of the Old-Timers embracing newspaper men and printing house owners and employés who have been connected with the industry in Chicago a quarter centry or more, commemorates the anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, and is the thirty-sixth annual event in the association's history.

Senator Medill McCormick, who was to have shared the oratorical honors of the occasion with S. J. Duncan-Clark, war news analyst of the Chicago Evening Post, cabled from Berlin to Prosper D. Fenn, chairman of the speakers' committee, that he could make no speaking engagements for January.

Chief Fitzmorris is expected to speak, his newspaper work before he became secretary to Mayor Thompson qualifying him to address his former co-workers.

William Sleepeck is chairman of the general committee of one hundred which is arranging the details. Clara Jane Shepard, owner of the Inland Printer magazine, is chairman of the hostesses' committee. The Rev. Dr Herbert W. Prince, rector of Epiphany Episcopal church, will offer the invocation. Charles L. Estey, former advertising counselor to the United Typothetae of America, the international association of employing printers, will act as toastmaster. President Michael Colbert, whose connection with THE TRIBUNE dates back forty years, will deliver the address of welcome. Dancing will follow the speaking program.

Food and Drug Act Lawyer Enters Partnership Here

George P. McCabe, solicitor for the department of agriculture under Presidents Roosevelt and Taft, and Charles J. Tressler, assistant general attorney for Swift & Co., yesterday announced the formation of a law partnership under the firm name of McCabe & Tressler, with offices at 111 West Monroe street.

Mr. McCabe supervised the writing of the federal food and drug act and was in charge of early government cases under that and the meat inspection act. With Drs. H. W. Wiley and F. L. Dunlap, he was a member of the board of food and drug inspection and was one of the principals in the famous McCabe-Wiley feud.

Mr. Tressler has been a member of the Swift & Co. law department for nineteen years and has been assistant general attorney for the firm for ten years.

Police Arrest Two Men Charged with 100 Robberies

Two men arrested late Friday night are believed by Capt. Patrick Harding of the Shakespeare avenue station to have committed more than 100 recent west side robberies. Of the two Theodore Asduras of 1420 West Adams street was captured by Tony Hendrickson of 3518 Wabansia avenue after he and another man had held up Frank Lamper of 1748 Ballou street. Asduras' companion fled, but policemen, going to his address caught William Limpares leaving with a suitcase load of jewelry. Both are being held for identification by victims of recent robberies.

A NEW YEAR BUTTERFLY

Virginia Smerage and the butterfly that was captured yesterday on Henry Garthe's front porch, at 4541 Magnolia avenue. Let California look to its climate laurels! [TRIBUNE Photo.]

BRIGHT and early yesterday morning Henry Garthe of 4541 Magnolia avenue sallied forth from his home, armed with a broom and a determination to start the New Year right. He was going to sweep off the front porch.

Before he could begin, however, he noticed a butterfly fluttering helplessly on the ledge. Numbed with cold, the insect had in some manner gotten to the porch.

Mr. Garthe took it into the house, warmed it, and then fed it honey and water. Now it is flying around from room to room, the pride of the children of the neighborhood.

THIS GIRL WEDS SO SECRETLY IT'S A SECRET TO HER

Made Bride Without Own Knowledge.

There was a knock on the hotel room door of pretty Miss Liola Cleveland, traveling saleswoman from Chicago. A voice said: "Open, dearie; it's your husband."

Miss Cleveland rubbed her eyes. She gasped. "Husband—h-u-s-b-a-n-d?" she queried. "But I have no husband."

"O, yes, you have," returned the voice. "I'm your husband."

"Please go away," said Miss Cleveland in a voice shaking with agitation. "I will call the house detective." The man left.

This scene was enacted in a Denver hotel during the latter part of September.

Wedded, Didn't Know It.

And last night at the home of her sister, Mrs. James B. McIntyre of 3147 Cambridge avenue, with whom she lives, Miss Cleveland said:

"Can you imagine my surprise when I found that I had actually been married without knowing it?"

She sat for a moment, twirling a telegram in her hands. She then explained:

"I registered at the Brown Palace hotel in Denver on Sept. 18. I was a stranger in the city and on the evening of the same day became acquainted with Lars J. Swanson, a wealthy oil promoter. With another woman and another man I went to his room. They either gave us drugs or whisky.

"I do not know what happened between 3 and 4 a. m. Mr. Swanson, the woman, and the other man told me I had been married to Swanson."

And He Forgot, Too.

Miss Cleveland said even her supposed husband did not remember being married the next day. But the marriage was a matter of record and it was shown that Magistrate Rice had performed the ceremony and had returned the license as prescribed by law.

The telegram said the marriage had been annulled in Denver yesterday.

Snowballed; Hurls Knife and Cuts Boy Near Lung

Enraged at being hit by a snowball thrown by Joseph Kelly, 16 years old, 6124 South Francisco avenue, one of a gang of youth said to frequent the vicinity of West Fifty-sixth street and Normal avenue, suddenly drew a knife and hurled it at Kelly, inflicting a gash two and a half inches long just below the latter's right lung. Kelly was found lying on the sidewalk by Dr. James J. Roach, 317 West Garfield boulevard, early yesterday, as he was driving to his home with his family after celebrating the advent of the New Year.

THIS POLITENESS BUSINESS MAY BRING A SURTAX

New York, Jan. 1.—[Special.]—"Being nice to an old gentleman" who casually visited St. Patrick's cathedral here brought $80,000 to Joseph A. Boyle, sexton, he said, on his return from Ireland New Year's eve.

The fortune was bequeathed the sexton by Dennis Cassidy of Cork.

"Mr. Cassidy came to America. I tried to be nice and answered all his questions and showed him what little attention I could," explained the sexton. "When he said good-by he remarked that he would 'remember me' in his will. A few weeks ago I got news to come to Cork and claim my legacy. Mr. Cassidy was 76 years old and unmarried."

Boyle, back at the cathedral, declared he is "going to keep right on being nice to every one."

SENATE TO TAKE UP NAVAL PEACE PLAN TOMORROW

Borah and Walsh Resolutions Up for Action.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—The proposal of an international agreement on the reduction of naval armament will be taken up by the foreign relations committee of the senate on Monday, when it will consider the two following resolutions:

By Senator Borah, directing the president to negotiate with Great Britain and Japan a 50 per cent reduction of naval appropriations by the three powers for five years.

By Senator Walsh of Montana, requesting the president to name delegates to act with the league of nations commission on disarmament.

What course President Wilson favors is not clear. Secretary Tumulty scouts the surmise that the president contemplates calling an international conference on disarmament under the authority of the 1916 naval appropriation act.

President Agrees with Daniels.

From one administration source came the opinion that the president sustains Secretary Daniels' contention that the only sure method of promoting disarmament is through the league of nations and that Mr. Wilson regards the Borah resolution as a scheme of the irreconcilables to discredit league processes. It is believed the president favors the Walsh resolution, for he notified the league he lacked authority to appoint members of the disarmament commission because the United States failed to accept the covenant.

The Walsh resolution, however, stands no show of favorable action by the committee. Senator Borah is confident his resolution will be reported favorably, although some influential Republican senators favor delay until the Harding administration comes in.

Commenting on President Wilson's declination to participate in the league of nations disarmament proposition on the ground that this country was not a member of the league, Mr. Walsh said tonight:

"That appears to me to be an utterly inadequate reason for not sending a representative from this country to engage in this great work. To me it appears to be a matter of entire indifference, in connection with the effort thus inaugurated, whether we are or are not members of the league of nations."

Argentine Exports for 1920 Show Increase Over 1919

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina, Dec. 31.—Ten million, eight hundred thousand tons of grain and oil seeds, valued at 1,792,500,000 pesos, were exported from Argentina during 1920, La Razon estimated today. The same exports in 1919 totaled 6,770,000 tons.

URGES U. S. AND BRITAIN TO CALL NAVAL COUNCIL

British League Would End Building Race.

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Jan. 1. — The executive committee of the Navy league has issued a memorandum on naval policy in which it states that there is no alternative to competitive building of warships by the powers except by an international naval agreement.

"This applies," the memorandum says, "no matter what type of ship dominates the sea, for new inventions will render these types obsolete on even shorter notice than they have our existing ships. But this will divert the building competition into new channels, as it always has.

A Misunderstood Term.

"The term 'command of the seas' conveys to an ill informed public simply the possessing of the greatest number of ships, but embracing of this doctrine by any country invites competition by other countries, since the high seas in times of peace are neutral.

Asks Council of Powers.

"The Navy league suggests that America and Great Britain take the lead in proposing a conference between all powers whose positions impose a guardianship of the seas, the conference to be composed of seamen who have held high commands at sea."

LEAVES DUMMY; FLEES CELL.

Sacramento, Cal., Jan. 1.—Guards at Folsom penitentiary today were searching for Jack Foster, alias John St. Claire, a convict from San Joaquin county, who escaped from his cell last night by leaving a dummy in his place. He was believed to have hidden in the prison yard.

Where else can you get a great big juicy tenderloin steak with mushrooms, cooked before your eyes, for 75 cents? You can't possibly know how good it is unless you eat one. Our price is so low because you pay nothing for service.

Service Only Increases Prices It Can't Improve the Food

After Theatre

Compare these prices with what other good restaurants charge. And don't forget the food can't be beaten anywhere at any price:

Half cold Lobster	45c
Club Sandwich	50c
Fried Frogs Legs with Tartar Sauce	50c
Head Lettuce, Roquefort Dressing	35c
Chicken a la King (in chafing dish)	50c

(The Chicken a la King and Club Sandwich are served only from 8 P. M. until midnight)

Served every day and Sunday too, 11 a. m. to midnight

Ma's Chicken Combination
85c

Whole Breast Milk Fed Chicken (All white meat)
Breaded Cream Gravy,
Bacon,
Candied Sweet Potatoes,
Green Peas in Cream
(All dark meat, 75c)

Breast of Chicken and Bacon	65c
Chicken, (dark meat) and Bacon	55c

Having food brought to you is a useless and costly luxury which few people, if any, can afford. Economy is the order of the day. It's un-American to waste money, and Service only increases food prices—it can't make the food a bit better.

At the North American Restaurant you serve yourself. The result of this Common Sense plan is you get food which can't be beaten anywhere at about half the cost in other good restaurants and hotels.

For instance: Where else can you get a half dozen fried oysters for 35 cents; or a generous cut of juicy, tender roast beef for 45 cents; or a pot of coffee (two cups) with real cream for 15 cents? Those are just a few of our prices. Others are all equally low.

Hundreds of Chicago's leading citizens dine here regularly. It takes less time than to have food brought to them. And, if they wish to linger and talk, the restaurant is as attractive and comfortable as any in the city.

There are no waiters hovering around waiting for a tip. And you eat exactly what you want, not something you don't want because you might hesitate to order from a waiter the food you really like.

These are some of the reasons why the North American Restaurant is proving so popular with the people who love good food but are willing to serve themselves to eliminate the high cost of service.

Open from 7 A. M. until Midnight Every Day and Sunday too

POLITE PORTER OF "FLOPTOWN" WINS $50 PRIZE

"I Was Taught That Way in Better Days."

Down in the shadowy solitudes of lower Clark street—where the Chinese shops mingle with the fourbit flops and the citizenry lives in the hope of forgetting—the advent of 1921 was a matter of unconcern. No carefree hornblowers trod its lonely sidewalks—only, now and then, one might see a shabby form shuffling south from Van Buren street to seek some dim lit lodging house.

It was here that the reporter, quitting the raucous loop in quest of courtesy and quiet, came upon Harry McCarthy. His weary feet were bearing him from the place he called his home to the dingy barroom where he defied the hoodoo of unemployment by feeding the fire and mopping the floor.

No Trouble Too Great.

"Say, friend, where's the Union station?" asked the politeness seeker. With great preciseness Mr. McCarthy pointed out the route thereto. The reporter edged a bit closer.

"I got to get to St. Louis," he said, "and I'll have to 'bo the blind.' Where's the best place to flip a train?"

The Irish brow of Harry wrinkled with thought.

"You know," he informed the scribe, "in all my years of knocking around I never hooked a ride. I got a friend that knows all about it, though. I'll——"

To a nearby eating joint trudged Harry. Through the steamed windows could be seen other denizens of Floptown seated at the barren counter as they studied the menu on the wall. The expenditure of a jitney is a matter of some importance on lower Clark street—an action not to be rushed into without due prayer and meditation.

Courtesy That Never Fails.

"He ain't there," announced Harry after scanning the hungry faces. "Maybe I can get somebody else."

He was already overdue at his place of business, but he tarried until another friend came slouching along.

"Say," greeted Harry, "this friend here wants to ride the rods to St. Louis. Tip him off, will you?"

Thereupon the trio went into conference on the subject of transportation. Railroad detectives, trains, schedules—all were discussed in detail.

"Don't go to the Union station," warned the new arrival. "Grab an Archer avenue car to Brighton Park. The 11 o'clock Alton stops there and there ain't any bulls around to bother you."

Up spoke Harry.

"He can't make that. It's too late," he argued. From the bright places of the loop came the sounds of celebration. The old year's death rattle was a matter now of minutes.

"Well,"—the railroad authority talking—"there's another train leaves at 1 o'clock, but that shoots through. Joliet's the first stop."

He trailed away into the shadows, leaving Harry with the problem of the St. Louis passage still heavy on his mind.

"Listen. Try the C. & E. I. down at Taylor street," he suggested after a bit of thought. "Go to the depot first—three blocks down and one over—and get a time table. Then you'll know when the train is coming and can grab it. Don't hop aboard in the station, though," he added. "The dicks will get you sure if you do."

Then—the Difference.

A solemn handshake ensued and the reporter sauntered back to the noisy loop. As he reached the corner of State and Van Buren streets a soldier, slightly unsteady from the rigors of celebration, was making inquiry of a cop.

"What?" growled the latter sourly.

The question was repeated.

"Two blocks and turn to your left," replied the officer in the same surly tone, and Mr. Doughboy, with a cheery thank you, lurched away.

Midnight had arrived. Nineteen-twenty was dead and the horns and sirens clamored in exultation. Politeness was forgotten in the mad ambition to do homage to '21.

"What's all the noise about?" asked the reporter of an onlooker.

"What!" exclaimed the latter. "Don't you know it's New Year's? Wake up, man!"

Thereupon the politeness seeker bethought himself of Harry McCarthy—the most courteous person he had met in an entire evening of searching. Back he turned to present the $50.

"My Best for Everybody."

"You asked me, didn't you, and I done the best I could for you," affirmed Harry in explanation. "That's what I do for everybody. I was brought up that way, I was, in the days when things was better. That was before I hit the old levee back in——"

But why exhume skeletons on New Year's? Harry earned the prize and he got it.

SCHWAB'S GOLD HUMIDOR STARTS COURT CONTEST

2 Claim to Be Agents of Steel Man.

BY GEORGE SELDES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BERLIN, Jan. 1.—A new complication has arisen over the capture by the Berlin police of the gold humidor which was a present to Charles M. Schwab from Chicagoans and which was stolen from his New York residence.

It was the story of this recovery, printed in THE TRIBUNE, which gave the tip upon which the New York police raided the steamer Mongolia and discovered jewelry and narcotic drug smuggling plots and obtained the confession of a seaman who sold American robbers' loot in Germany.

Two men have appeared in Berlin, each alleging he is the authorized agent to recover the humidor, which is worth $10,000, for Mr. Schwab. One is Fritz Happe, director of the German branch of the Chicago Pneumatic Tool company, acting on orders from H. A. Jackson, president, who is a friend of Schwab.

The other is Walter Blauweiss, who just arrived from New York and says Schwab authorized him to bring the humidor back.

Distrust Each Other.

Happe distrusts Blauweiss and Blauweiss distrusts Happe. Nevertheless, these developments release THE TRIBUNE correspondent of his promise not to write details until the gold casket is recovered. A month ago Siegund Bloch, once a resident of Chicago and later of St. Albans, Vt., came to THE TRIBUNE's Berlin office with information that the humidor and American jewelry worth millions were brought to Hamburg by American seamen. In exchange for details Bloch asked aid in getting a passport to America. THE TRIBUNE representatives introduced Bloch to the American mission where he stated he came to America in 1895, but never took out citizenship papers. In 1914, while living at St. Albans, he made remarks predicting German victory, he said. In 1917, he alleged, business' rivals used the remarks against him and he was interned. In 1920 Bloch was freed and returned to Germany, but now wishes to go back to America and become a citizen, inasmuch as his two children were born there.

Bloch Traces Humidor.

When he couldn't be assured of a passport, Bloch decided to trace the Schwab humidor, thinking it might be a means of getting back to the United States. He secured the humidor. Happe offered to buy it and invited Bloch to bring it to his office and get the money. Happe had police there and they seized the humidor, but let Bloch go. He secured an injunction to prevent the humidor being taken out of the country. He cabled Mr. Schwab he would drop the injunction if he is given the money he spent to get it. That is the way matters stand at present. Meanwhile Mr. Schwab may have no place for his Christmas cigars.

A bonus ranging from 10 to 15 per cent of the year's salary was given to each of the 100 employés of the Emil Kahn & Co., produce commissioners at 70 West South Water street, at a banquet to them in the cameo room of the Hotel Morrison last night.

MADERO SLAYER, LONG IN PRISON, TAKES OWN LIFE

Gen. Cardenas Is Suicide in Guatemala.

GUATEMALA CITY, Dec. 13.—[By Mail.]—The suicide of Francisco Cardenas, former Mexican general, in the central plaza of this city on Nov. 27, is believed here to have ended all doubt as to who was the real slayer of the Mexican president, Francisco I. Madero Jr.

Cardenas had told the Associated Press correspondent that he commanded the guard by whom Madero was shot, but did not explain why he ordered the shooting.

Both Shot Feb. 22, 1913.

Madero, with the vice president, Pino Suarez, was shot to death on the night of Feb. 22, 1913, while being taken from his place of imprisonment in the national palace to the penitentiary in Mexico City.

The report to the authorities was that the prisoners tried to escape and the soldiers were obliged to shoot them.

Not long afterward Cardenas appeared in Guatemala. Soon he was imprisoned by order of President Estrada Cabrera.

Cardenas was a prisoner until during the revolution last April. Then the dictator, Cabrera, was overthrown and Cardenas was taken from the penitentiary and brought into this city under guard.

Pointed Out as Slayer.

Col. Belteton pointed him out to the Associated Press correspondent as the man who had killed Madero. Cardenas said he was in command of the guard that did the killing.

Cardenas made no further explanation, being more intent on his own misadventures, stating he had been in prison nearly eight years, more than two of them in solitary confinement. If this is correct, he must have fled from Mexico shortly after the murders when Gen. Victoriano Huerta still was in power.

The new government gave Cardenas an official position at the penitentiary, but it is said he accepted money for granting certain prohibited privileges to prisoners.

He lost this job and was accused of paying too much attention to the wife of a political prisoner.

Again Taken to Prison.

When the husband was released he was stabbed by a man who said Cardenas had paid him to do it. Cardenas was imprisoned, but released on bail.

Recently a request came from Mexico that he be held for extradition on the Madero murder charge, as the man directly responsible for the deed.

Cardenas escaped from the city, but was recaptured in some woods a few miles beyond in the district of Las Vacas on the night of Nov. 26.

At the central plaza of the city Cardenas suddenly drew a small revolver wrapped in a handkerchif and shot at one of the soldiers, only wounding him slightly. As the other soldiers closed in on him he placed the muzzle of the pistol in his mouth, fired twice, and fell.

CHURCH LEADER HERE GOES TO AID STRICKEN EUROPE

The Rt. Rev. Monsignor F. A. Rempe, vicar general and pastor of St. Clement's church, will sail within a short time for Germany, Austria, Hungary, and other points in central Europe to make a six months' survey of the condition of children and the members of the religious orders. Rempe will go as the special representative of the bishops of America, and after visiting all of the bishops in the desolated regions will go to Rome to make a report of the needs of the people. He will distribute funds raised by the German-Austrian relief committee of the archdiocese of Chicago, of which he is chairman, and of many carloads of clothing sent by contributors in Chicago and elsewhere.

NAVY RECRUITED TO FULL PEACE TIME STRENGTH

The United States navy is recruited to full peace strength. The enlisted personnel was swelled to such an extent by the recent recruiting drive that now a "weeding out" process has been inaugurated. Undesirable and inapt sailors are being discharged to make place for a higher type of seamen.

This was revealed yesterday when Capt. Daniel W. Wurtsbaugh, commandant of the Great Lakes Naval Training station, made public orders from Washington ordering the reorganization. The orders were read to all the sailors at mess with a warning that discharges might be awaiting those who fail to come up to the standard.

Capt. Wurtsbaugh announced the plan of the navy to give 20,000 members of the enlisted personnel of the naval reserve forces throughout the country sea training during 1921. In the Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh naval districts—the ones in the middle west covered by Great Lakes—there are approximately 69,000 members of naval reserve forces to whom this opportunity is open.

NEW YEAR'S EVES KNOCK LIDS OFF BALD PARISIANS

Boulevards Give 1921 a Novel Welcome.

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Jan. 1.—Fishing rods twenty-one feet long, with little balloons dangling at the ends, with which the New Year's revelers teased and poked their neighbors, were the sensation among the novelties introduced by the big restaurants to amuse clients who were welcoming in 1921.

Open Season on Bald Heads.

World famous restaurants presented wild scenes in the early morning hours. Beautiful bare backed, aigretted women laden with blazing jewels and armed with the latest fad dispelled the dignity of baldheaded celebrants.

There was tremendous hilarity at the Café de Paris when a leading actress displaced the wig of a well known politician who never before had been suspected of wearing a toupee. The management of one restaurant tried to collect the fishing rods when an exceptionally gay party set about disarranging the elaborate coiffures and diamond tiaras worn by the women.

"Snow" Balls Missing.

Most restaurants did not distribute the usual little cotton "snow" balls brilliantly colored tonight because on Christmas eve many of the revelers soaked them in wine and then hurled them accurately, with the result that red, blue, green, and yellow splotches were made on the bare backs and necks of the dancers and many expensive gowns were ruined.

Rain which ushered in the New Year made taxi chauffeurs demand exorbitant sums for carrying parties from one restaurant to another.

ADOPT GREGORIAN CALENDAR.

The Roumanian government has adopted the Gregorian calendar. The ecclesiastical authorities in Roumania continue, however, to use the Julian calendar.

FEWER ORDERS CANCELED AS MILLS REOPEN

Industry Begins to Show Healthier Signs.

BY ARTHUR M. EVANS.

The cancellation fever shows signs of abating and the faster it vanishes the quicker will slackened industries start to resume. All over the world loud roars of protest have been raised against abrogation of orders, and in the last few weeks they have been especially vehement.

With prices hitting the toboggan, merchants unwilling to be caught with high priced goods on their shelves have canceled orders placed with wholesalers. These in turn have canceled contracts with the mills and shops. The process has been common to nearly all lines of merchandise and materials, and it has led to a disturbance in the ordinary confidence on which business is based, and has served as one of the factors in causing depression. Many houses have held aloof from the practice, but the volume of cancellations has been prodigious.

All World Affected.

It's world wide. American manufacturers, especially the textile men who were first hit by the buyers' strike, raise a roar against jobbers, wholesalers, and merchants. The British mills for weeks have been shrieking because of some American cancellations. American exporters, in turn, have been laying it on English importers.

And now comes the coal industry, in which our exporters are facing great competition from Britain. Our output of bituminous in 1920 was about 12,000,000 tons ahead of 1919, and our output of anthracite was 2,000 000 tons ahead of last year. The latest flurry in the export trade was caused when France canceled $100,000,000 of coal contracts because of a reduction in the price of British coal. Meanwhile Germany faces a temporary shutdown of its industries so that coal can be shipped to the allies in accordance with the Spa agreement.

Labor's Lead Followed.

All told, cancellations have led to a peculiar situation. One prime cause of complaint against organized labor, especially since the war, has been that it has not always lived up to its contracts—when labor was at a premium it was quite common for unions to demand higher wages before their old schedules expired. Now from some quarters comes a complaint that many of the employing group in canceling orders have been guilty of precisely the same thing they were condemning labor for. The slipper is on the other foot.

Experts along La Salle and State streets say that deflation of prices in general has progressed to the point where replacements of stocks is now the absorbing question. In many lines the recession has got to the point where no further drop is looked for, and in those goods the orders are beginning to be registered and mills are getting ready to reopen.

Some Mills Reopen.

Last week, buried in the news from the east about closing factories, was an item that seven mills which have been closed are preparing to reopen at full capacity. They have got down to a new price level, in which deflation of materials, wages, profits and prices of the product all took place.

"The fellow who keeps boring away can keep going," said one small manufacturer yesterday. "Keep an eye on prices and the supply, that's the ticket, and don't be asleep when prices hit bedrock. Here's a case: Two weeks ago I suffered the cancellation of a lot of stuff which was almost ready for delivery. The concerns which ordered it simply shoved it back on our hands. Instead of going to the hospital, I called in the sales force and read the riot act to them. They went out and bucked in hard, and in a comparatively short time sold that stuff. The manufacturer who is ready to shave profits down to a minimum these days to keep his working force intact is the one who will be the first to benefit when things begin to hum."

Various Views Held.

As to how long the period of depression will last, there is a wide variety of conjecture. The Harvard university committee on economic research says revival of business will begin early in the spring—March or April. The committee on statistics of the United States Chamber of Commerce looks for an end of the period of depression in thirty days.

SHORTER SHIFTS TO END PROBLEM OF BRITISH IDLE

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Jan. 1.—To ameliorate the unemployment situation, the ministry announces that all government establishments will be worked on short time shifts, so all employés may share the work, dismissals be avoided, and more men given jobs.

Private industries and local authorities are urged to do likewise.

Portsmouth and Woolwich trade unions and labor leaders at the Clyde shipyards disapprove on the grounds that it will reduce the wage level.

Minister of Labor T. J. Macnamara has written to the Building Trade Workers' federation regretting the delay in answering the government's proposals for giving work to former service men and asking for a reply within a fortnight.

Cotton Mills to Reopen Monday at 20% Wage Cut

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 1.—The Interwoven Mills, Inc., employing 1,600 persons, will re-open on full time and at a 20 per cent wage cut Monday morning, after three weeks' shut down. Company officials today said continuance of the work on the full time schedule depended upon developments in the industry.

2 Die, Many Ill, from N. Y. New Year's Wassail

New York, Jan. 1.—Two deaths and many cases of serious illness from alcoholism as a result of New Year's eve celebrations were reported from hospitals throughout the city today.

THE OTHER FELLOW'S JOB

[TRIBUNE Photo.]
JOE HIRSCH ON THE JOB.

JOE HIRSCH is a structural ironworker. At present he is working on the southeast plaza of the new boulevard link. Friday he and eight other men set 113 tons of steel in a nine hour-setting. That is an average day's work.

In setting a beam, a steam derrick, a wrench, and a bolt are the only tools used. The derrick swings the beam into place, a bolt is shoved through one end, and the "setter" then runs to the other end and sticks his wrench through the hole to hold the beam in position until a nut can be screwed in place. The beam is then all ready for the riveters.

Hirsch figures he can set about 500 rivets in a day—

The gathering of further statistics in regard to Mr. Hirsch's daily job was interrupted when some one upset a bucket of red paint on the photographer's overcoat and he was forced to flee precipitately in the direction of a dyeing and cleaning establishment.

AUTOS KILL 1,470 DURING 1920 IN NEW YORK STATE

New York, Jan. 1.—Automobiles killed 1,470 persons in New York state last year. Of these fatalities 746 were in New York City, the National Highways Protective association announced here today. These figures compare with 1,017 automobile fatalities in the state in 1913. Since then "practically no concrete law to curb reckless driving has been enacted in the state," the association said.

Neighboring states enacting such regulations have reduced automobile fatalities 17 per cent, the society claimed.

Fines totaling $384,626 were paid by traffic violators in New York City during 1920, the annual report of the traffic court disclosed today.

83 Killed in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 1.—Official figures given out by the coroner show that eighty-three persons were killed in automobile accidents in Milwaukee county during 1920, an increase of two over 1919.

LONDON TRYING HARD.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—Automobile vehicles of all classes killed fifty-one persons in London in November of last year, compared with fifty in November, 1919, police statistics say. The London referred to is the metropolitan police district, which extends over a radius of fifteen miles from Charing Cross, and covers an area of roughly 700 square miles.

Hat Maker's Pay May Be Cut from $10 to $8 a Day

Danbury, Conn., Jan. 1.—Acting upon the request of the National Hat Manufacturers' association that hatters' wages be reduced 40 per cent to the pre-war scale, the national directors of the United Hatters of America, at a meeting in New York yesterday voted to recommend a cut of 20 per cent in the minimum scale from $10 a day to $8. The proposal now goes to the local unions.

DECISION ON "L" VALUE AND FARES DUE THIS WEEK

Mayor's Traction Scheme Also Nears Action.

BY OSCAR E. HEWITT.

The public utilities commission is expected to announce this week whether it will raise or lower the car fare on the elevated roads or permit it to remain at 8⅓ cents by ticket or 10 cents cash.

Ten days ago the commission boosted certain phone rates and at the same time declined to disturb the primary charge for gas. It has also decided against modifications of the fare on the surface lines.

Of equal, if not greater, importance will be the decision of the commission on the value of the elevated properties for rate making purposes. To this, as well as the fare, is added considerable interest, because of the approaching inauguration of Governor Elect Small. This also will probably take place this week, if the legislature elects its speaker immediately. Mr. Small, it will be remembered, is pledged to the policy of abolishing the public utilities commission and has promised to recommend that action in his inaugural address.

Mayor to Announce Plans.

Before or soon after the Springfield ceremonies Mayor Thompson is expected to make formal announcement of his plans, physical as well as legal, for consummation of his 5 cent fare program. Two meetings of the city council, one tomorrow and another Wednesday, are planned, and each affords an opportunity to the mayor to bring his transportation scheme before the public in an authorized manner.

The official valuation of the elevated roads by the utilities commission is of prime significance. These valuations will have more or less influence in determining the car fare in the future. The companies are interested in getting them as high as they can; the car riders in keeping them as low as is fair.

Four Valuations.

Four valuations of these properties have been made in the last eight years. In 1912 the city's harbor and subway commission made one valuation, A. L. Drum & Co. made another, and Prof. George F. Swain of Harvard university made another. Then the city's traction and subway commission of 1916 made another "as of 1912" and one "as of 1916." All these decided what the reproduction cost was and also the "present value." These figures may be summarized as follows:

Year. Valuator.	Reproduction cost.	Present value.
1912 — City commission	$62,154,432	$53,451,181
1912—Drum Co.	98,279,727	94,257,095
1912—Prf. Swain	98,196,994	93,279,143
1916 — City commission*	76,534,441	65,125,644
1916 — City commission	81,767,779	70,400,916

*Valuations as of 1912.

Because of a higher price level, it seems probable that these valuators would have made larger figures in 1920 for the same properties, even without additions in cash to the investment since 1912 and 1916.

1916 Valuation Accepted.

In effect the elevated roads accepted in 1918 the 1916 valuation of $70,400,916 when they were satisfied with the transportation program worked out and submitted to the voters in 1918, which was defeated. The program contemplated that the elevated roads should be put into a combined elevated, subway, and surface system at $70,400,916. It was pointed out at that time that the elevated had not earned the current rate of return on that valuation in the three year period immediately preceding.

Under the public utilities act regulating rates, the public service corporations claim a legal right to a reasonable return upon a present fair value of their properties, which they claim they can enforce in the courts.

COAST GUARD STATION AT EVANSTON CLOSES; CHICAGO'S STAYS OPEN

CAPT. CHARLES CARLAND.

Capt. Charles Carland closed the Evanston station of the coast guard last night after paying off his crew. The station will not reopen until April. Capt. and Mrs. Carland will remain at the station throughout the winter, however. The station at the mouth of the Chicago river, in command of Capt. John O. Anderson, will not close down.

POLICE TRAIL 3 IN 'VAMPIRE' CAR THAT SLEW MAN

2 Dead, 7 Hurt, New Year Toll of Autos.

The driver and two women occupants of the "vampire" automobile that struck and killed Joseph Warzecka of 2325 West Twentieth street at Twenty-fourth street and Western avenue on New Year's morning are being sought by the Marquette police.

Warzecka, 20 years old, and his brother Stanley were crossing the street when the car bore down on them. Stanley leaped to safety, but the machine struck his brother. When several pedestrians picked Warzecka up he was dead. The automobile did not stop.

New Year Eve Victim Dies.

Leo J. Martin, 43 years old, 1104 West Madison street, died yesterday at the Emergency hospital of injuries received New Year's eve when he was struck by an automobile at Jackson boulevard and Aberdeen street.

Andrew Allman, a freight handler, was fatally hurt when struck by a mail truck driven by Roy Hagen, 2228 North Lincoln street, at Thirteenth street and Wabash avenue. Allman was removed to St. Luke's hospital, where he died, and Hagen was taken to the South Clark street police station, where he is being held pending the inquest today.

Bridge Crash Injures Four.

Four persons were injured when an automobile crashed into an upright steel girder at the west end of the Jackson boulevard bridge. The automobile, owned and driven by Stillman C. Fera, 27 West Madison, was bringing the party back from a New Year's celebration. The injured, besides Fera, are Peter Jappas, 153 West Twenty-first street; James Pintozil, 157 West Twenty-first street, and his wife, Mary. All were taken to Iroquois hospital, where it was found their injuries were minor.

Three men were injured in a collision between a taxicab driven by David Lowenberg, 1443 South Trumbull avenue, and a car piloted by John Bozmanski, 1857 Dayton street.

HAITI PREFERS GOING TO WRECK IN HAITIAN WAY

Resents Yankee Efforts for Progress.

BY EYE WITNESS.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti, Dec. 1—[By Mail.]—That wise and conscientious soldier, Col. John Russell, commanding the 1st provisional brigade, U. S. M. C., in Haiti, accurately summed up the difficulties and defects of the present American occupation of Haiti when he said:

"This is like two men trying to ride the same horse. One has got to be in front. Here they both want to be in front."

It follows that the man to be in front should be the best rider, the rider who has taken it upon himself to set the pace and select the route and control the animal.

That is what the Americans have taken upon themselves to do in the matter of finding the way for Haiti and controlling this half-tamed animal which has been rampageous for more than a century.

Is American Control Best?

Is the American the best rider of the Haitian horse?

He has been riding, and losing way, and losing time, and letting the beast stumble for five years, but in that time—from the fruitful part of which a year and a half when we were in the European war must be deducted—he has made better progress than the Haitian has made in 116 years of independence.

A-foot or horseback, he cannot carry his rum as well as a Haitian can. By midnight of a party at his club he is inflamed and one of his pleasantries is to toss champagne glasses at the head of a compatriot, whereas the Haitian gentry, as they did last night at their beautiful club, the Bellevue, dance and sip punch until 4 in the morning and then, cheerful but sober, start in their autos down the hill to early mass at the great cream colored cathedral.

Negroes Have Best Manners.

The manners of the most polished American now on this island admirable though they are, are deficient in comparison with the manners of black Mr. Smith, the Port au Prince tailor who sells pith helmets and makes you a suit of pongee in forty-eight hours. Georges Sylcaine and Seymour Pradel and Georges Léger are better men in the belle lettres than the best educated American in the occupation, but the mournful truth remains that the Haitian intellectuals have not proved the best men for Haiti. The facts are the arraignment and they are so decisive that they relieve the writer on Haitian affairs from all necessity for composing columns of objurgation that might seem to the stranger vindictive.

I have told you how far short of catching step with the world's forward march along the paths of material betterment the Haitians have fallen.

Their record in spiritual progress is equally meager.

These people have been here, 2,000,000 strong, independent, and occupying a fruitful land, for 116 years—a century of entity, in short, and in the enjoyment of it they have been almost wholly undisturbed, except by one another.

Enjoy Being Backward.

Today they have in their capital, nor elsewhere in the republic, no national museum, no art gallery, no public library, no symphony orchestra, no grand opera, no dramatic theater, no national university, although the oldest university in the western world stands at the other end of the island still, and, they tell me, is about one-tenth efficient. The language of the mass of the Haitian people, an Africanized French called Creole, remains practically unwritten, and they could not read it if it were written.

More appalling intellectual sluggishness is not to be encountered among any other people that has enjoyed centuries of contact with highly civilized races, except in the case of the American Indian.

Turning to what men call the more practical aspects of a nation's development, we find that the Haitians have built no commercial fleet. The harbors of one of the richest islands on the globe are almost empty week in and week out. Haitian docks, wharves, and lighting plants have been built by foreign capital. The presidential palace, a noble structure, was built by northern artisans.

They Build No Roads.

The Haitians have built no roads to open up and link up their 10,000 square miles of fruitfulness, and they have allowed the magnificent French roads of the seventeenth century to revert to trails. Their bridge building has been a traditional and notorious source of loot.

Many a new administration has staked itself to ready cash by letting a corrupt contract for the replanking of a bridge over the Artibonite. The bridge having in a fashion been replanked to the enrichment of a series of officials, contractors, and subcontractors, they have to set a sentry beside it to keep the inhabitants from stealing the planks from which they would make doors and carts. Yet the back country abounds with timber that is both durable and beautiful. The so-called Haitian golden oak would delight the soul of an American cabinetmaker. It is lovely.

As a matter of fact, more than one bridge for which a $40,000 appropriation was made finally got itself built for nothing by the corvel system of impressed labor, a system which our officers of occupation employed successfully in their road building until they became overzealous and abused it, thus feeding the flame of Cacoism.

They have no savings bank, though the buying of rentes (bonds) has to some degree served the purposes of persons of thrift. And the Haitian is reasonably thrifty. But these bonds are doubtful paper now and will be until American treaty officials, working in cordial cooperation with the Haitian government, get them rehabilitated. No interest has been paid for years and the delay in rehabilitation is one of the prime sources of Haitian grievance against our people.

They Dig Few Wells.

In a hundred years the Haitian has dug few wells. The countryman will walk a mile and a half for water where by digging twenty feet he could tap it. But his grandfather walked a mile and a half for water, and his children will do it unless somebody patiently takes them by the hand and shows them where to dig.

He has never taken an authentic census. The population estimates for the republic range from two to two and a half millions; the estimates for Port au Prince—and there are four of them—range from 70,000 to 110,000.

The Haitian is 97 per cent illiterate, and in a land where nature is kind to prodigality he is more than 50 per cent undernourished. Such hospital records as the Americans have been able to tabulate will show this. That is the case against Haiti and that is why the American occupation, reformed and widened, should stay.

The Haitian is not ready to ride either alone or in front.

CITY HALL TYPIST SPRINGS SURPRISE BY WRITING IT "MRS."

MRS. J. H. FRAZER.

Friends of Miss Grace Ethel Jones, stenographer in the office of the board of examiners in the city hall, were surprised yesterday to learn of her wedding on Dec. 27 to Dr. Jewett H. Frazer, on Monday, at the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul on Washington boulevard.

Throughout the week telephone calls to Local 131, Main 447, have been answered by "Miss Jones." Yesterday her friends received New Year greetings from Mr. and Mrs. Frazer, 5000 Kenmore avenue, giving them the first intimation of the wedding, which followed a romance beginning during a vacation visit to Louisville, Ky., several years ago. Mrs. Frazer is the daughter of Mrs. Carl Marty, 832 Junior terrace.

CHILE AWAKENING TO REAL EFFECT OF JAP INVASION

Roper Starts Campaign for Exclusion.

BY J. W. WHITE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

SANTIAGO, Jan. 1.—Coincident with widespread publicity on the approaching visit of the Japanese squadron and the elaborate plans made by the government to entertain the officers and men, the Diario Illustrado launches an editorial campaign against Japanese immigation and calls upon the working classes to note that they are being replaced by Asiatics, who will work for very low wages.

This appeal to the workers is highly significant since the labor party, which just won the presidential election, occupies a more important position in Chile's political life than ever before.

Says Chile Must Act.

The editorial says:

"Some time ago we said it would be advantageous to begin diplomatic conversations with nations on the Pacific coast to formulate plans to defend ourselves against Asiatic immigration, which is frankly exotic and impossible of assimilation. Today we cannot say such a conference would be advantageous, for now it is necessary and probably obligatory.

"Why, while the United States impedes such immigration, should we continue to leave our coasts and our laws wide open to races which do not bring us internal force, but on the contrary suck the sap from our national life?

"Our history and our traditions have no connection with Asia or Africa. Chileans have no desire to invade Japan, and it is vital that we obtain reciprocal freedom from Japanese immigration.

Japs Menace Chile Labor.

"Nations must be prepared if they wish to save themselves. Nothing is clearer than that the Japanese, equipped as they are for intensive labor with low pay, cheap food, and with their extraordinary economy, can and will drive out the principal part of the laboring population of Chile and at the same time keep out European immigration, which we most need."

The paper's anti-Japanese campaign is based on information, which the paper terms reliable, that plans are under way to dump a large number of Japanese colonists in the rich agricultural regions of Chile, and on the fear that once this is begun Chile will become the Mecca for Japanese from California.

OFFICERS OF NEW CORTES.

MADRID, Jan. 1.—Officials of the new cortes probably will remain the same as in the old parliament, with Joaquin Sanchez Toca, speaker of the senate, and J. Sanchez Guerra, speaker of the lower house. Several changes among the deputy speakers are expected.

BALFOUR TRICK GOT 4 BILLIONS, DENMAN SAYS

Pact with Japs Hidden from U. S., Charge.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—Declaring he was present when Arthur J. Balfour promised to disclose "all the agreements between the allies affecting the interests of the United States and world shipping conditions," William Denman, first chairman of the shipping board, charged today, in an open letter to members of congress that Balfour failed to keep that promise and did not disclose secret agreements between Great Britain and Japan.

This promise was made, the letter declares, in the presence of Secretary of State Lansing and Assistant Secretary Polk. The reason for this silence, the letter charges, required "no further explanation than his quest for the $4,000,000,000" which the United States which, from a naval standpoint, deloaned to Great Britain shortly after America's entry into the world war.

Describes Alleged Pacts.

These secret agreements, according to the letter, should have been known to the United States, because:

"The ink was scarcely dry on the last of the three notes constituting the so-called 'secret Shantung' treaties, stroyed the island of Guam, probably our most valuable naval base in the Pacific.

"Japan, our rival in the Pacific, was by agreement with Great Britain confirmed in the possession of the Marienne group of islands, which placed an insurmountable barrier between us and the north Asiatic coast and the Japanese islands.

What Great Britain Got.

"Great Britain's price for this was the British control of the islands of the south Pacific group, which in the event of hostilities to which such diplomacy inevitably tends isolated Guam from the Philippines.

"It is obvious that Mr. Balfour owed to us the disclosure of the existence of these agreements. Why he did not requires no further explanation than his quest of the four billions of dollars."

BUSINESS 'POOR BUT SOUND,' SAYS COMMERCE BODY

Boom Predicted for the Coming Spring.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—The new year begins with general business conditions throughout the country "poor but sound," says Archer Wall Douglas, chairman of the committee on statistics and standards of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in his semi-annual review of the business situation issued today.

According to Mr. Douglas a determined and constructive effort is being exerted to bring about a change for the better by team work and coöperation. In the entire absence of any apprehension of a money panic he sees the most encouraging feature of the whole situation.

"How long the present situation will last is a subject of much speculation and inquiry," says Mr. Douglas. "The general thought is that the winter months will be quiet and that as the spring opens there will be an appreciable change for the better.

Low Prices Mean Boom.

"In the cotton sections there are those who feel the first six months of the year will show a continuous monotony of dull business. In the industrial districts there is a general feeling that the situation will improve when prices of commodities reach a figure that will tempt the ultimate consumer to begin purchasing for other than his immediate wants.

"It is rather significant that some sales can be made at bargain figures, but very few at moderate concessions. The answer apparently is, therefore, that when the readjustment, now in active operations has resulted in a sufficiently low level of prices for manufactured commodities, business in the industrial districts will assume more normal proportions.

Big Harvest, Little Buying.

"We have the curious paradox in this country at this time of the greatest harvest ever gathered, and consequently the greatest amount of agricultural wealth, in quantity, that we have ever known, with the lack of the factor of ready translation into liquid capital; and in the midst of incredible plenty on every hand the countryside is still in sore distress.

"The farmer is particularly short of funds since he has marketed so small a portion of his crop, and as the country banks are already loaned up to their limit it is difficult, in fact almost impossible, for the merchants and farmers to obtain further credit. The farmer is most unwilling to sell his products at present low figures, and is not doing so, save under stress of necessity or because of pressure brought by merchants and banks to settle his accounts."

THINK BOYS BURNED SCHOOL.

Omaha, Neb., Jan. 1.—Police are working on a theory that students who were to occupy the buildings on Monday set the fire which tonight destroyed two annexes of the High Schol of Commerce and an apartment house here, causing a loss estimated at $150,000.

We lose, of course, but we do so gracefully, and compliment the Public on its great good fortune. SURROUND DANCE HALL; 20 CASES SMALLPOX FOUND

East Chicago Sees Peak of Epidemic Passed.

If eruptions appear on the body, consult a doctor. The health department will aid the physician in diagnosis, if necessary.

Every doctor's office is a vaccination station. There are 5,000 in Chicago. If you can't pay, the health department will supply the vaccine free and the doctor will vaccinate free.

There will be no smallpox epidemic in Chicago. Fifty-five health department doctors are in the field every day. Children who are not vaccinated have been excluded from school. Almost every one in Chicago is vaccinated. Every one should be.

JOHN DILL ROBERTSON,
Commissioner of Health.

Twenty-three new cases of smallpox were discovered yesterday in East Chicago by Dr. D. B. Johns in the house to house canvass now being conducted under the direction of Dr. J. A. Teegarden, secretary of the board of health.

Twenty other cases, acording to an unofficial estimate, were discovered when health board physicians surrounded Kluda hall, One Hundred and Fiftieth street and Magoun avenue, where a dance and social entertainment was in progress. About 100 persons were dancing. All were vaccinated and quarantined.

This increases the total of known cases to about 150. Dr. Teegarden said last night the authorities were no longer alarmed, that the situation was under control, but that strict quarantine measures would be necessary for many days. Some 2,500 persons have now been vaccinated.

Think Epidemic Peak Past.

"We are well satisfied," said Dr. Teegarden. "The section two miles square in the residential district of the town is still under quarantine. The streets are closed. None except purveyors of food is permitted to enter or leave, and those only under restrictions prescribed by the authorities. We hope the peak of the epidemic has been reached."

Health Commissioner John Dill Robertson last night issued a caution to Chicagoans.

"I earnestly advise every one who has not received preventive treatment to lose no time in getting vaccinated," he said. "I anticipate no serious outbreak here, but we cannot be too careful. At the present time there are only fourteen cases in Chicago. In all sections where smallpox has been reported I have ordered compulsory vaccination."

Find One New Case Here.

One new case was reported here yesterday—that of a grocer in North Oakley boulevard. Dr. Robertson said 200 persons had been exposed to the disease because of the neglect of the grocer to report his condition. All have been vaccinated. He would not disclose the grocer's name, he said. The store has been closed.

Residents of Aurora were urged to be vaccinated yesterday by Dr. George W. Haan, city health commissioner. There are two cases there.

THANK TRIBUNE READERS

THREE little children who found that the world has a heart yesterday wrote to THE TRIBUNE asking that wishes for a "bright, happy, and prosperous new year be extended."

They are John, James, and Josephine Miller. Their father is John Miller, the heroic Glencoe flagman, who was injured while vainly endeavoring to save the lives of Mr. and Mrs. William Tanner during the summer of 1919. Tanner and his wife were killed by a train at a Chicago and Northwestern railroad crossing in Hubbard Woods.

After THE TRIBUNE had published the story of Miller's act, readers subscribed a fund of $14,968.69. It has been placed in custody of the Union Trust company, which has invested it and pays Mr. Miller the income therefrom in monthly installments.

In their letter the children write that "they wish to thank the good people for all they have done for them."

WATSON WANTS U. S. BONDS TO BE GOOD AS CASH

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 1.—In a copyrighted statement to be published in the Atlanta Constitution tomorrow Thomas E. Watson, United States senator elect from this state, announced that at the extra session of the Sixty-seventh congress he will introduce a bill to make liberty bonds and other government war paper legal tender.

Mr. Watson, according to the announcement, declares such action would have an electrifying effect upon American business life, and that upon enactment of the legislation all apprehension of a panic would disappear.

The plan would require the federal reserve and farm loan banks to lend money directly to individuals and the secretary of the treasury to issue the unissued greenbacks authorized by a bill signed by President Lincoln.

LABOR LEADER IN CRASH; GUN PLAY; ARRESTED

Steve Kelliher, labor leader, landed at the South Wabash avenue station at 6 o'clock yesterday morning. Today he will be given a hearing on charges of threats to assault with a deadly weapon and violation of a boulevard ordinance.

According to the police, Kelliher was driving his automobile, in which a woman was riding, to his home at 5447 Michigan avenue. At Forty-first street and Michigan avenue there was a collision between Kelliher's machine and one owned and driven by Sidney H. Haase of 3335 Federal street, owner of a hardware store at 3558 South State street. Both machines were damaged.

Kelliher is said to have displayed a revolver when he jumped out and threatened Haase. The latter held his ground. When the police arrived Kelliher, who is vice president of the motion picture operators' union and connected with the theater janitors' union, had no weapon, but a citizen told the police that he had hidden the revolver in his car, where it was found.

HERE'S A CITY THAT MANAGES TO PAY ITS WAY

Birmingham Lays Claim to a Record.

Birmingham, Ala., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—With the dawn of the new year the city of Birmingham announces that it has closed three strenuous years with a balance on the right side of the ledger and with a record of having wiped out debts amounting to $207,000; this in spite of unprecedented increases in the cost of labor and materials and unprecedented demands upon the resources of the municipality. "In accomplishing these things we have hung up a record we believe to be unequaled among American cities," said H. S. Ryall, clerk of the city commission, and he challenges the cities for a showdown upon the proposition.

The financial showing made by Birmingham is claimed to be all the more remarkable because of the fact that the tax rate here has been the lowest among American cities, being only $1 on the hundred of assessed values, and only 50 cents of this dollar being available for general municipal purposes. Of the remainder, 30 cents goes to schools and 20 cents into a sinking fund.

Record in War Years.

The amount "to the good" with which Birmingham closed each of the "war years" was as follows: 1918, $42,002.11; 1919, $130,905.24; 1920, $40,688.46.

As explained by the commissioners, these unprecedented results were obtained by strict adherence to the policy of making the public dollar go just as far as the skillfully managed private dollar. Every unnecessary expenditure was eliminated, and every resource of the city was placed where it would do the most good. Expenditures for fire protection, for the protection of public health, and for educational purposes were increased generously, while appropriations for things not so essential were held down to the minimum. The test applied to every appropriation was this: "Is this investment absolutely necessary to the proper functioning of the government?" If the proposal could not stand this test it was not made.

Citizens' Coöperation Helps.

While the claim is made that Birmingham has the most efficient form of government yet devised, the five commissioners plan, full credit for what has been achieved is not given to the form of government, but rather is accounted for on the ground that here has been developed a measure of coöperation between the citizen and the official that is perhaps unique.

Throughout the trying period of the war, the public was kept fully informed about city affairs, and every newspaper reader knew why this or that was not being done if "this or that" fell within the scope of things not deemed essential to the welfare of the city. Every important step contemplated by the commissioners was given advance publicity, and all interested persons were invited to attend the meeting at which action was contemplated, there to give their views upon the subject.

Out of these repeated discussions upon all sorts of public questions there developed a popular insight into the workings of the municipal machinery that is deemed rare in this age when so many citizens are prone to forget all about municipal matters once the election is over.

ANOTHER GALLI-CURCI?

[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Cyrena Van Gordon, prima donna (at right), and Albertina De Trana, the little Chicago girl she will educate for the opera as a result of hearing her sing "with the voice of a Melba" as a hand organ played in the street.

HAS Chicago a future Melba or Galli-Curci in little Albertina De Trana of West Huron street?

Cyrena Van Gordon, prima donna of the Chicago Opera company, says yes. For Albertina is her discovery. The other day she heard the little girl singing as a street organ played. The diva stopped her car to listen, then invited the child home with her and tested her voice.

"A Melba voice!" was her verdict.

So she has taken Albertina under her wing and has promised that she shall receive a musical education at the hands of her own teacher.

"The child's voice has a wonderful range and a true feeling for pitch," said the prima donna. "If it develops as it promises, Chicago will have another great singer some day."

Miss Van Gordon has a number of other protégées who are studying for grand opera, but she believes her latest find is the most remarkable of all.

BIRMINGHAM MAY BORROW £5,000,000 IN U. S.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The city of Birmingham, forced by the financial stringency in Britain, is contemplating floating a municipal loan of £5,000,000 in America. At the same time the finance committee has decided to recommend that the city defer making any large extension of the electrical works. This was to cost nearly £2,000,000 when taken in conjunction with the housing program. At least £2,500,000 are needed to meet existing commitments. There seems little prospect of raising this in Great Britain. The plans under way call for £5,000,000 before March 19, 1922. It is stated that the rate of interest required for an American loan is so high it would not be considered if there were other means possible, but it is felt that the prosperity of an industrial city like Birmingham depends on the development of cheap power and an adequate housing for the workers. In these circumstances an American loan even at high rates is considered good finance.

TOWNLEY TELLS FARMERS OF HIS GOLDEN RAINBOW

Kansans Bewitched at Sight of New Canaan.

Salina, Kas., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—A. C. Townley and his bad of Nonpartisan league organizers have had unusual success in this district surrounding Hedville, a village in northwest Saline county.

Hedville farmers had poor crops this year, and many of those who had wheat this fall waited for higher prices. Some of the farmers made a little money by letting go early, but many were caught when they had to meet notes. Wheat at $1.40 won't meet production cost, the farmers say.

Townley came to Saline county hoping his propaganda would find fertile soil. He sent his workers in full force into the Hedville region to stir up the disgruntled farmers. His men pointed out that bread was selling at 15 cents a loaf in the cities, although the farmers could not pay for production.

Here is Townley's argument:

"What is a chamber of commerce? An organization of business men joined together for their own interests or for the interest of their community. That's all the Nonpartisan league is—an organization of farmers joined together in the interest of their industry and themselves."

Townley's men visit farmers, who have finished most of their work for the winter. They ask each man to come to a neighbor's house in the evening. There, in the kitchen or dining room, with a light turned low, the little group hears Townley or one of his workers.

They don't hear anything about Nonpartisanism as it has worked out in North Dakota. They hear of Townley's ideas of state owned elevators, banks, and methods of grading and docking wheat. That interests them.

And Townley is winning over scores of farmers. Around Hedville many of the farmers have never heard of the North Dakota banks crashing.

To insure a happy new year:

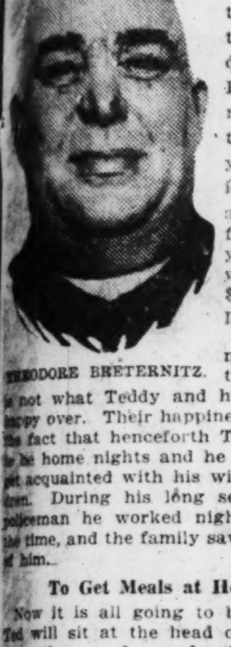
COP, TARGET FOR 31 YEARS, QUITS AT WIFE'S PLEA

Sergt. Breternitz Makes Last Pull.

It was a happy New Year for Mr. and Mrs. Teddy Breternitz of 6039 South Peoria street. Teddy retired from the police department Friday night, after thirty-one years' service. He was a sergeant for twenty years and will draw $75 a month pension.



THEODORE BRETERNITZ.

But the matter of the pension is not what Teddy and his wife are happy over. Their happiness is due to the fact that henceforth Ted is going to be home nights and he is going to get acquainted with his wife and children. During his long service as a policeman he worked nights most of the time, and the family saw very little of him.

To Get Meals at Home.

Now it is all going to be changed. Ted will sit at the head of the table three times a day and ask the folks what part of the fowl they prefer.

When Sergt. Breternitz "pulled up" from a patrol box at 6 o'clock Friday night, which registered at the South Wabash avenue station, it was his last act as a "copper."

"Hello, Billy," he said to the operator. "This is Teddy. My last pull. I wish everybody in the world a happy New Year."

Sergt. Breternitz has seen as much excitement in his 31 years of police work as any man who ever wore the uniform. He was at the detective bureau eighteen years, and during this time he took an active part in most of the big cases handled by this branch of the department. He arrested George E. Jacks, former chief of police at Muskegon, Mich., for the murder of William Magee, a butter and egg salesman, two decades ago. Jacks was hanged.

Got Wife Slayer.

Breternitz also arrested J. Maurice Pettit, who, in 1916, killed his wife of a month, at 930 Barry avenue. After the murder Pettit fled to Michigan. Breternitz was in Detroit on another matter, when a farmer telephoned the sheriff of Wayne county that a "suspicious stranger" asked for shelter at a house near Redford, Mich. Breternitz, who knew about the Pettit murder, had a "hunch" that the "suspicious stranger" was the Chicago slayer. He and the sheriff drove to the farm house indicated and captured the wife murderer.

When Herman Schuettler was assistant chief of police he put Breternitz in charge of the first "flying squadron." He had thirty men under him. Lieut. Charles V. Larkin also had charge of a similar squad.

Later, when Schuettler took hold of the gambling situation, he put Breternitz and William Schubert in charge. Breternitz has been shot at five times, but never hit.

"I was going to stick on the force until next April, when my thirty-one years would be in," said Breternitz. "Poor Charley Conlon, who was killed by bandits who held up the Ashland drug store, was going to quit the first of the year. When the wife read that in the paper she said, 'Ted, don't wait till April—it may then be too late.'

"I took her advice, and handed in my resignation a few days ago."

Unprecedented values in fashionable footwear for women—features of the O-G SEMI-ANNUAL SALE!

We believe that Chicago women should know these facts!

The motive generally behind a sale is—to unload merchandise or to free shelves of accumulated stock. The O-G Semi-Annual Sale of shoes and hosiery for men and women is unique—because it is not inaugurated to accomplish this purpose.

Many months ago we foresaw this new era of lower prices and started plans then for drastic price revisions that have attained great success, hence this remarkable sale.

We are very happy to state that the seven O-G stores are carrying a normal stock of O-G shoes, and that this stock is all smart, new footwear—a large portion comprising advance Spring fashions.

Accordingly, the O-G Semi-Annual Sale is not a clearance sale, but a sale especially exploited to popularize these new O-G footwear fashions—expressly designed by and manufactured for O'Connor & Goldberg—and purchased below market cost—affording wearers of O-G shoes ultra-fashionable, highest grade footwear, at prices that mean tremendous savings.

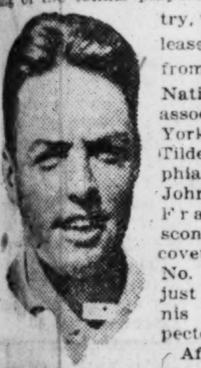
TILDEN HEADS RANKING LIST OF TENNIS STARS

THE FIRST TEN

1. W. T. Tilden.	6. C. J. Griffin.
2. W. M. Johnston.	7. W. M. Washburn.
3. R. N. Williams.	8. C. S. Garland.
4. Ichiya Kumagae.	9. Nat W. Niles.
5. W. E. Davis.	10. W. F. Johnson.

BY GEORGE SHAFFER.

The eagerly awaited national ranking of the tennis players of the country, which was released yesterday from offices of the National Tennis association in New York, shows Bill Tilden of Philadelphia, and Billy Johnston of San Francisco, ensconced in the coveted position of No. 1 and No. 2, just as every tennis follower expected.



CLARENCE GRIFFIN [TRIBUNE Photo.]

After these leaders, considerable shifting has occurred from the ranking of the leading men's singles players for former years. R. Norris Williams of Boston, who headed the list in 1916, appears in third place, and the steady little left handed Japanese, Ichiya Kumagae, is rated fourth.

Hayes Ranks Eigtheenth.

Walter T. Hayes of Chicago, who held ninth position in the 1919 ranking, appears as eighteenth for 1920, his drop being the greatest of all ten leaders last season.

Local followers of sport will be interested in the play accorded Roland Roberts of San Francisco, who won the national clay courts title here last July, and that of Vincent Richards, the Yonkers youth, who cleaned up so many local events last summer. Each appears just outside the "charmed ten," Roberts being eleventh and Richards twelfth.

Johnston-Griffin Team First.

In the men's doubles, Johnston and Clarence (Peck) Griffin of San Francisco, lead for the third time since they first leaped to team prominence in 1915. Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory returns to first place in the women's ranking. The Chicago team of Jimmy Weber and Lucien Williams is scored ninth in the men's doubles, with the western champions, Walter T. Hayes and Ralph Burdick, tenth.

Due principally to his showing in the national clay court event, Alex M. Squair of Chicago is twenty-fourth in the singles. Sam Hardy, manager-captain of the Davis cup team, and formerly of this city, is twenty-seventh. Following are the leading rankers:

YANKEES SWEEP DAVIS CUP PLAY; WIN EACH MATCH

AUCKLAND, N. Z., Jan. 1.—The American Davis cup team completed the most decisive conquest in the history of the international tennis trophy since 1911, when the Australasian team swept all five matches against the United States, by winning all five matches of the challenge round against Australasia here. In the concluding singles contest, W. T. Tilden Jr. won from Gerard F. Patterson, 5-7, 6-2, 6-3, 6-3.

This made the score five straight matches for the Americans, who also won through their preliminary and final round events of the Davis cup contest of 1920 without the loss of a match against either France or Great Britain, in England last summer.

Patterson Starts Brilliantly.

The closing match was played in ideal weather and was witnessed by a great crowd. The American Davis cup team, which besides Tilden includes W. M. Johnston, Watson Washburn, and Samuel Hardy, will shortly leave New Zealand for Australia, to play the leading stars there, before going back to the States.

Patterson's first set against Tilden was his best display of the Davis cup series, his terrific smashes being sensational, as was his tremendous service. Tilden called into use a great repertoire of strokes to break through this severely aggressive game, and managed to force the set into deuce games before losing it.

Varied Attack Wins.

After the first set, Tilden's craftiness and varied attack became more and more successful, while Patterson lost his accuracy on his hard smashes.

NEW BIG LEAGUE STIRS YAWN HERE

Reports of a third major league to compete with the American and National leagues next season did not cause a ripple on the surface of Chicago baseball circles yesterday for two reasons. One was that Chicago was not included in the proposed circuit of the new organization, and the other was that several ciphers apparently were lost in transit over the wires. The new "major" league was reported to have been capitalized for $60,000, which would just about capitalize Babe Ruth.

Chicago Hockey Assn. to Hold Meeting Tomorrow

A meeting of the Chicago Hockey association will be held at the I. A. C. tomorrow at 8 p. m. The schedule committee, consisting of J. P. Power, L. C. White, and F. R. Dandeno, will make their final report for the approval of the board of directors and if suitable ice is available the senior series will probably start Wednesday evening.

Illinois Recipient of Lacing by Cornhuskers

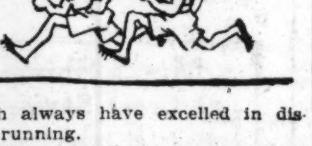
Urbana, Ill., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Nebraska defeated Illinois at basketball tonight, 30 to 25. The Cornhuskers led practically all the way. Capt. Bekins and Smith featured the visitors' attack.

In the Wake of the News

CORNELL'S HARRIERS.

ALTHOUGH at times we jingo and scold and profess to see evidences of their wanting the best of it in sporting events, we have, at heart, a wholesome respect for the sportsmanship of our British cousins as exemplified by their college young men.

Therefore we do not begrudge the victory of the Oxford-Cambridge cross-country team over our invaders from Cornell. In fact, we think the Ithacans made a remarkable showing in securing 26 of 55 points and finishing second and third over the route of seven and one-half miles, especially as the British always have excelled in distance running.



For those who like to wave Old Glory and assert that Cornell deserves even greater credit for meeting a combined team and could have defeated either one alone, we might remind that England lost more heavily of its young men than we did in the great war.

International contests of this nature, with victory or defeat accepted gracefully, are not less valuable than treaties or trade agreements in promoting friendship between nations.

Ben Re-Vamped.

O, don't you remember Sweet Alice, Ben Bolt,
When Youth's joyous pathways we ranged?
That shy and demure biological volt?
(He'll find her remarkably changed).

You haven't been able, I know, to forget
The evening we three went to dine,
And how she was shocked by a girl's cigaret.
(Now her cig is stronger than mine.)

We worshiped her meekly as one from above,
Our guide was her Will or her Won't,
How angry she grew when we tried to make love!
(She's furious now when they don't.)

But come, let us hasten, we three
Shall talk of those times far removed.
She's just the same Alice, I think you'll agree,
(He'll probably think she's improved.)

MARKET LETTER.

WE wish a Happier New Year to our few surviving customers and clients. Those who have followed our unfailing advice (without failing) for the last six months have been enabled to establish creditable losses for income tax purposes—in fact, when Uncle Samuel receives their returns he will not have a dry handkerchief left.

For 1921, we can assure clients the same character of information and forecasts. We do not aim to provide you with a sure means of making money in the market. In fact, we feel that we are likely to teach you the best means of accumulating wealth is by attending to your job rather than by being jobbed. If we prevent you from falling into the hands of others less scrupulous, we have accomplished something.

For the future, we expect domestic flurries beginning Monday if local merchants get their bills out on time. This is the time to husband your resources and go a bit easy on Friend Wife. Incidentally your money will pass into stronger hands. When this healthy reaction is over, your technical position will be improved, but the credit stringency will hardly pass in less than 30 to 60 days.

Davis Cup Result.

America's lifting of the Davis cup in Australia (where it had reposed since 1914, when the Antipodes team, of which Anthony Wilding, killed in war service, was a member, won in this country) was anticipated by Yankee followers of the game as a result of the matches played last summer in England, when Tilden beat Patterson in the British title event.

Tilden and Johnston are a formidable pair at the court game. Patterson of Australia, however, ranks below them, and Brookes, one of the greatest masters of strategy and steadiness in the history of the game in his prime, probably is beginning to feel the dulling effects of age.

Barring unexpected developments, the international trophy seems safely stowed away for several years to come.

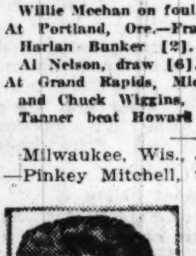
Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Pinkey Mitchell, the Cream City's lean, long ring expert, displayed a little more class than Dennis O'Keefe of Chicago could cope with this afternoon. The local lad had things his own way in a ten round bout, the visitor not having a chance after the first round, which was even, due principally to the fact that Mitchell instead of wading in preferred to feel out his husky opponent.



PINKEY MITCHELL.

O'Keefe took his worst punishment in the fourth round, when his admirers thought he was a goner. Mitchell soaked him repeatedly on the jaw and body, and the Chicagoan probably would have dropped for the count had not the bell saved him. After this O'Keefe could do nothing and was outpointed by a wide margin. In the ninth he hung on continually, evidently having no desire to let Mitchell get loose with his blows to body and face.

The Chicago boxer did little damage to his opponent. Mitchell took a few stiff rights to the jaw early in the fight, but the blows had little effect. Mitchell scaled 138¼ pounds, O'Keefe 142.

McGoorty and Wiggins Battle to Fast Draw

Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 1.—Eddie McGoorty of Oshkosh, Wis., and Chuck Wiggins of Indianapolis, light heavyweights, traveled ten fast rounds to a draw this afternoon. Wiggins had the earlier rounds by a shade, but it was evened up in the later sessions by McGoorty, with both men making a slashing finish of it in the ninth and tenth.

Johnny Tanner, St. Paul lightweight, had a wide margin over Howard Gipe of Jackson, Mich., in an eight round preliminary.

Eddie Shevlin Stops McLaughlin in Fifth

Boston, Mass., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Eddie Shevlin of Roxbury was too strong for Johnny McLoughlin in his fight at Marlboro today, and the referee stopped the bout in the fifth round. The Philly boxer was in excellent condition, but the Dartmouth boxing master was too clever. Benny Frush of Baltimore won easily from Al Shubert of New Bedford in a ten round battle. In the fifth Frush floored his opponent twice.

Joey Doyle, Chicago Boy, Knocked Out at Green Bay

Green Bay, Wis., Jan. 1.—Archie Meissner of Menominee today was knocked out in the sixth round of a ten round bout by Jimmy Nuss of Depere, Wis. Steve Ridgely of Green Bay knocked out Joey Doyle of Chicago in the sixth round and Ed Sharp of Green Bay put out Young Martin of Depere in the third. Kid McDonough of Depere had a shade the better of Jack Gallagher in six rounds.

Mel Coogan Outpoints O'Connell at Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 1.—Mel Coogan of New York won the newspaper decision over Charley O'Connell of Cleveland in a ten round boxing bout this afternoon. Kid Roberts of Wheeling, W. Va., was shaded by Mike Moran of Pittsburgh in six rounds.

The Inquiring Reporter

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

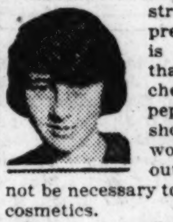
Today's Question.

Which do you prefer, roller or ice skating?

Where Asked.

Washington street between La Salle and Clark streets.

The Answers.



Madeline Clemens, 2710 Giddings street, stenographer—I prefer ice skating, for it is the clean, crisp air that puts roses in our cheeks and gives the pep all young people should have. If people would indulge in these outdoor sports it would not be necessary to use rouge and other cosmetics.

Charles A. Reading, 2531 North Spaulding avenue, cashier—Ice skating is far superior to roller skating. It is more beneficial to the skater. Being out in the open air and exercising is better than being inside. I have been an ardent skater for twenty years and never miss an opportunity to get on the ice.

Nellie A. Carey, 3934 Van Buren street, typist—I prefer roller skating because I believe it is more graceful and there is less danger of taking cold. There is a fascination about this form of sport especially when a good orchestra is playing and one swings around the rink on the arm of the one one likes best. Romance has often been found on a pair of roller skates.

George Allen, 5808 Michigan avenue, clerk—The healthiest and most vigorous exercise any one could participate in is ice skating. It develops and brings into play muscles that otherwise are never exercised. Ice skating keeps a fellow fit. It's a fresh air sport.

Julia A. Lewis, 3500 West Van Buren street, record clerk—Ice skating, by all means. Outdoor sport of any kind is always more beneficial. I have nothing to say against roller skating — that also is a healthy sport for youngsters when indulged in outdoors. Ice skating is most invigorating and is not necessarily strenuous.

JEWTRAW AND MOORE FEATURE IN NATIONAL ICE SKATING EVENTS

Newburg, N. Y., Jan. 1.—Charles Jewtraw of Lake Placid, N. J., and Joe Moore of New York City performed brilliantly in the national outdoor skating championships here this afternoon and tied for the point trophy with 70 points each. Ten thousand witnessed the events.

After winning the 220 and 440 yard championship events, Jewtraw, although ill, entered the 880 yard event and finished third. He made an attempt to compete in the mile, but was unable to finish and was carried from the ice.

Mile Easy for Moore.

Moore won the mile event handily and finished second to Leslie Boyd of the Tremont Skating club in the five mile handicap. He finished behind Jewtraw in the 220 and second to Leitch in the 880.

The women's and school boys' event developed hard fought contests, the most notable of which was the victory of Elsie Muller of New York in the 440 yard championship event for women and the performance of Al Bach of New York in the half mile event for high school boys.

Ice in Fine Condition.

The ice, due to a drop in the temperature last night, was ideal for the contests. Summaries:

Quarter mile, for elementary school boys—Won by Watson Gee, Newburgh; Roy Plog, Poughkeepsie, second; Raymond Murray, New York, third. Time, :58 4-5.

Half mile, for high school boys—Won by Al Bach, New York; Lewis Alpern, New York, second; J. Vosberg, Montreal, third. Time, 2:06 1-5.

CALIFORNIA'S WHIRLWIND ATTACK ROUTS OHIO STATE ELEVEN, 28-0

Use Multiple Passes and Fierce Line Drives.

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

Pasadena, Cal., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Successful execution of the forward pass after a double backward pass, combined with a slashing attack through the line and off the tackles, gave California—the greatest eleven ever developed on the Pacific coast—a victory over Ohio State, western conference champion, in the intersectional football struggle at Tournament park today, 28 to 0.

W. H. ECKERSALL. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

It was one of the greatest upsets in the history of the gridiron game in this section. Even the most ardent California rooter did not look for triumph by such a margin. The stampede was a jolting surprise to the Buckeye rooters, who had looked upon their eleven as one of the best ever developed at the Ohio institution.

Ohio Trick Used Against It.

While Ohio was expected to score by use of the forward pass, the situation was just the reverse. The Golden State eleven had all the best of this style of attack, and two long forward passes executed from a double pass were the best running formations seen since the forward pass first became a dangerous weapon of attack back in the fall of 1906.

Not alone did California excel in the aerial offense, but it successfully executed plays of ancient vintage. The Statue of Liberty play, in which a player stands with the ball in his hand as if to make a forward pass and then another comes from behind and takes the ball out of his hand to complete an end run, was used with success.

Maybe Ohio Forgot These.

The criss-cross, one of the oldest plays in football, was worked time and again for substantial gains, while the delayed bucks into the line, and hard drives off the tackles repeatedly netted the necessary yardage. Even the quick return kick was not overlooked by crafty Charley Erb, field general of the Galden State eleven.

While the powerful Blue and Gold team was fortified with a great assortment of plays, the line was drilled in true Andy Smith fashion. This coach, who formerly was mentor at University of Pennsylvania, and later at Purdue, had his forwards charging at a terrific clip, and the interference seldom failed to take off tacklers.

Defense Paralyzes Buckeyes.

On the other hand, Ohio appeared helpless. Its great forward passes, which had resulted in defeats of Wisconsin, Chicago, and Illinois, appeared amateurish in comparison with those executed by California. California's defense for these passes was perfect. The line held its own with the Buckeye wall, and this permitted the secondary defense to lie back for the passes. That Coach Smith accomplished his purpose was shown by the few passes completed by the invaders.

There is no disputing that California as it played today would have been a worthy opponent for any team in the country. The writer saw Pittsburgh, one of the best in the east, in action, and Coach Warner's men would have had to play great football to beat this Golden state team.

Coast Game Is Strong.

The result shows that the caliber of football played in this section is the equal of the game played in the middle west and far east. The men appear much larger and are more active than eastern warriors, and all that is needed at other institutions in this section is coaches of the Smith type.

The forward passes worked by California were sprung at times when wholly unexpected. On these plays the ball was passed to either half back. As the latter was about to be tackled he passed it back to a teammate, who then hurled it far down the field to a receiver. Such plays carried the double threat of a run or a pass and not only drew in the Ohio defense but sailed the passes high over the heads of the secondary players.

California Kicks Off.

After the usual practice of kicking and running through signals, the captains were called to the center of the field to determine the choice of goals by the toss of a coin. Capt. Majors called the turn, and California elected to defend the south goal, with a slight wind at its back.

H. Workman kicked off for Ohio to Sprott, who was tackled on his 25 yard line. California immediately started its slashing attack, but was forced to punt. Nisbet booted to Stinchcomb, who was downed on his 30 yard line. The Buckeyes punted on third down, after two attempts had failed to gain. The Bears did the same thing, after two charges into the line, and the first break in the game came shortly afterward.

Recover Stinchie's Fumble.

C. Taylor, who started at full back for Ohio, hit center for 3 yards. On the next play Stinchcomb fumbled and California recovered the ball on Ohio's 25 yard line. This break gave California courage, but the Buckeyes fought with determination to stem the rushes.

In the first play Nisbet tossed a forward pass to Muller, who leaped high in the air to retrieve the ball. When he was brought to earth the oval rested on the Buckeye 12 yard line. From a shift formation Sprott circled Ohio's left end and was stopped on the 2 yard line.

This same player, who performed with great brilliancy throughout the game, then drove through the line for a touchdown on the next play. Toomey kicked the goal, which gave California a lead of seven points.

Buckeyes Bid for Score.

Ohio gave every indication of knotting the score shortly afterward. The Buckeyes obtained possession of the oval on their 45 yard line after an exchange of punts. A forward pass, H. Workman to Stinchcomb, placed the ball on California's 25 yard line.

Blair drove off McMillan to the 8 yard line, where Stinchcomb again fumbled, and California recovered. Nisbet immediately punted and Stinchie was downed on his 30 yard line. Another exchange of punts left the ball in midfield in Ohio's possession. H. Workman and Stinchcomb made short gains around the ends, while forward passes, H. Workman to Blair to Stinchcomb, placed the oval on California's 8 yard line. An attempted pass, H. Workman to Stinchcomb, went as a touchback in the end zone and Ohio's best chance was gone.

Shower Multiple Passes.

The ball was put in play on California' 20 yard line and on the first down Toomey circled Ohio's right end for 35 yards. On the next play the forward pass was called into commission. Sprott received the oval on a direct pass from the center. He started to run around Ohio's left end, with Muller close behind.

As Sprott was about to be tackled he passed the oval back to Muller, who in turn threw the ball 46 yards down the field to Stephens, the end, who caught it behind the Buckeyes' goal. It was a beautiful play, and one of the longest forward passes ever executed in a big game.

California continued its relentless attack, completing another intricate multiple pass shortly after. Sprott received the ball from center and passed back to Toomey when about to be tackled. Toomey stopped suddenly and

PHONE CALLS REFLECT INTEREST IN BIG GAME

WIDESPREAD interest of the entire middle west was reflected in the phone calls to THE TRIBUNE regarding the progress and outcome of the California-Ohio State football game. Two operators in THE TRIBUNE switchboard room were kept busy for more than two and a half hours answering queries about the contest, and the sporting department also handled hundreds of calls.

On the whole, more than 6,000 calls were answered. Long distance queries were answered from Kalamazoo, Battle Creek, Grand Rapids, and Ann Arbor, Mich.; Fort Wayne, Terre Haute, South Bend, and Hammond, Ind.; Milwaukee; and Elgin, Libertyville, Rockford, Joliet, Princeton, and all the suburban districts in Illinois.

A number of the fans seemed shrewd observers, for they commented they had picked California to win.

hurled the oval far down the field to Muller, who was downed on Ohio's four yard line. On the next play Sprott circled Ohio's left end for a touchdown.

Intercept Ohio State Toss.

The Golden state scored their final touchdown in the last period. Nisbet intercepted an Ohio foward pass late in the third period on the Buckeye 30 yard line. Smashes in to the line carried the ball to the 14 yard mark, as time was called for the third period. Deeds took Toomey's place at right halfback, and immediately tore around Ohio's left end to the one yard line. On the next play he drove through Capt. Huffman's position for the last touchdown of the game.

Late in the closing period California took the oval well into Ohio territory, and missed another touchdown by one foot.

As the game was played California had the advantage in nearly every department. Its tackling was hard and clean, in comparison with the arm and necktie attempts of the Buckeyes. Both teams followed the ball cleverly, and there was little rough work, although the men were on the verge of mixing on several occasions.

Muller Proves Wonderful End.

Brick Muller, California great end, was one of the outstanding players. He is a wonderful man in receiving forward passes and equally strong on defense Capt. Majors performed well for California.

Stinchcomb, the star back of Ohio, was unable to get going. He was a marked man from the start. He was rested in the third period, and sent back into the fray for the final quarter. Capt. Huffman and C. Taylor played well, but the remainder of the team appeared to lack the dash and drive shown in the conference games.

The defeat was a hard blow for Ohio and its loyal rooters, who will start on their homeward journey tomorrow.

45,000 See Contest.

The big stands were taxed to capacity long before the teams trotted on the field. Close to 45,000 persons were in the park before 2 o'clock. Included in this mass were thousands who had stood in line all night to wait for the 3,000 general admission seats. Half an hour before game time the weather reached 85 degrees. too warm for football.

NOTES O. THE GAME

Pasadena, Cal., Jan 1.—[Special.]—Admiral Rodman of the Pacific fleet and Lieut. Jack Kennedy were among the large gathering of naval officers present.

Sprott, California half back, broke up numerous Ohio forward pass plays, and his offensive work was the most consistent of any player.

California's forward passes are the talk of football coaches who saw the game They claimed the Golden State eleven did not uncork any such plays during the season.

The Ohio eleven and party will stop off at the Grand canyon Tuesday and will arrive in Columbus Friday. Coach Wilce and the players took the defeat keenly.

The strength of California may be gathered from the fact no conference eleven scored more than seven points on the Buckeyes last fall.

Workman's passing was extremely poor. On a number of occasions the ball did not get within five yards of the intended mark.

Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion, was among the 45,000 present. the titleholder intends to start light training here next week for his contest with Willard March 17.

The weather was too warm for football. Most of the male spectators were in shirt sleeves and few of the women wore coats.

Coach Andy Smith is far from being a has been. Before today's game Andy was in danger of being ousted, but the result should make him a fixture at the Berkeley institution.

EVERETT DOWNS CLEVELAND EAST TECH BOYS, 16 TO 7

Everett, Wash., Jan. 1.—Everett High school football team, western prep champion, defeated East Tech High of Cleveland, O., claimant of the middle west championship, 16 to 7, today. The visitors excelled in trick playing, scoring on a forward pass.

Everett's strong line was Cleveland's stumbling block both offensively and defensively. The home team's touchdowns were the result of steady, consistent gains. It was Everett's ball on Cleveland's 1 yard line when the whistle blew. A crowd estimated at 10,000 witnessed the contest.

Fort Worth, Tex., Jan. 1.—Centre college of Danville, Ky., brought its seven native Texas football players home today, and they, with the assistance of four from other states, snowed under the Texas Christian university of Fort Worth by a score of 63 to 7.

The Christian university players gained their seven points without ever having had the ball in their possession when Jackson early in the first period snatched a forward pass and dashed ninety yards for a touchdown. From then on the game was a rout, with T. C. U. at times holding valiantly.

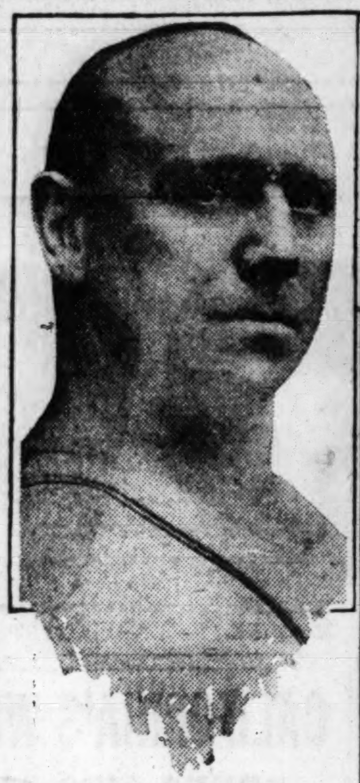
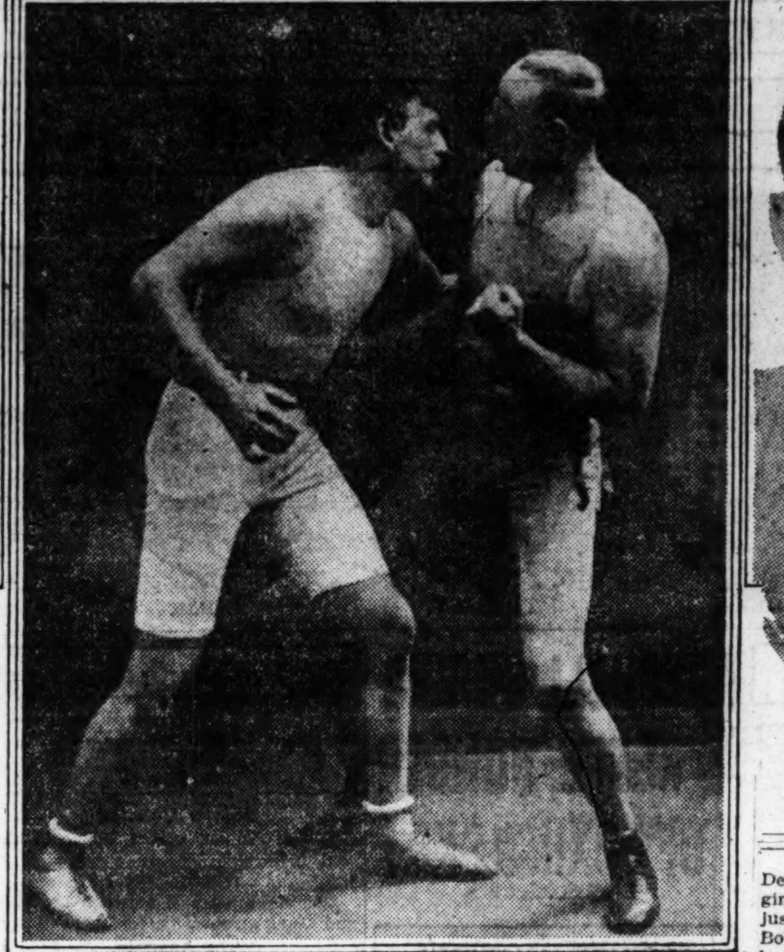
Bob Fitz and Son, Bob, Who Follows in Footsteps



BOB FITZSIMMONS SR.



BOB JR. AND HIS LATE DAD IN ACTION.

BOB FITZSIMMONS JR.
[Photo International.]

BY JOE DORNEY.

OLD-TIME fight fans who watched Bob Fitzsimmons, son of the mighty blacksmith, batter big Jim Monahan to defeat at Newark, N. J., the other day began speculating on the prospect of his wearing the heavyweight crown, once held by his late father of glorious pugilistic memory.

Young Fitzsimmons is 24 years old. His father was 28 before he had his first fight in the United States and 35 before he defeated Jim Corbett at Carson City and annexed the championship.

Old Bob's greatest ambition in his later years was to live to see "Bobbie," as he always called him, heavyweight champion. He was in a fair way to have this ambition realized, but Young Bob, when the war broke out, immediately enlisted. He was eager to fight as a private in France, but the officials of his division thought he would be more valuable to America's cause teaching the men the use of their fists than in shooting at Germans, and so he was one of the army boxing instructors throughout the conflict.

Tour Country Together.

For several years before the war Young and Old Bob toured the country; doing a boxing act together, with Young Bob meeting—and defeating—all comers. They did two shows a day, afternoon and evening, but Old Bob always insisted the son reach the theater mornings at 10 and from that time until noon dad would teach him the tricks which had made him one of the greatest fighters of all time.

While appearing in Pittsburgh four years ago, Old Bob asked Joe Choynski, who was physical director of an athletic club there, to take Young Bob's place some evening. Joe, who gave the former champion the hardest fight he ever had, said he'd like to, but he thought the club members might object to have him appear in a vaudeville theater. However, there was a husky boxer at the club whom he thought had the making of a champion and he suggested he be tried out with young Bob.

Young Bob Lands K. O.

This was arranged and the men met the next day during the matinée. Joe's "champ" lasted half a round with Young Bob and Joe himself predicted at that time that Young Bob, who was 20, would be champion of the world some day.

Young Bob's first fight took place in Chicago in the summer of 1897, when he was 1 year old. Lou M. Houseman, manager of Woods theater, who was Fitzsimmons' timekeeper at Carson City, had the Illinois rights to the pictures of "The Fight of the Century." They were shown at Grand Opera house and as a stroke of press agency work Lou had Fitz come on to the opening.

Fitz, his wife (Rose Julian), Martin Julian, his manager; George Siler, who refereed the fight; Houseman, and several other sporting men were gathered in Bob's suite at the old Tremont house. Baby Bob was playing about the floor with a toy wagon. The door was open and another child about Young Bob's size walked in. He toddled over to Bob Jr. and tried to pull the wagon away. Young Bob doubled up his baby fists and made for him. The stranger slapped Bob in the face and the latter hit him right on the nose, knocking him down.

Count Broken Up.

Siler, as a joke, started to count, but before he could reach ten, Mrs. Fitzsimmons picked the lad up, gave him some candy to soothe his feelings, and carried him out to his mother.

Young Bob later on was given a good common school education, living with his sisters at a home Bob bought at Dunellen, N. J. He was about 16 when Bob began teaching him the real art of self defense.

Old Bob always would describe the boy something like this:

"'E kin lick any man in the world right now. Hi cawnt lay a glove on 'im. Not a champ or near champ would lawst four rounds with 'im, hincludin' Johnson or Willard. 'E's like a bear, 'e is, and whenever I tries to 'it 'im 'e throws me to the floor. 'E's a wonder of the pugilistic world. Fifty times better nor Hi ever was."

Level Headed Fellow.

Young Bob is level headed. He isn't rushing into print challenging Jack Dempsey. He is taking his time, beginning at the bottom and working up, just as his famous father did. Old Bob began fighting in Australia when he was 18 and he won many battles in that section of the world, but he was unknown in America until he landed here in 1890 and beat Billy McCarthy in San Francisco. He was 28 then, and a first class fighting man, but no one on this side of the Pacific knew it. He won the middleweight crown from Jack Dempsey (The Nonpareil) a year later and the heavyweight crown from Jim Corbett six years afterward. He lost it to Jeffries at 37 and came within an ace of winning it back from Jeffries when he was past 40. He continued his fighting career until he was 52.

Physically Young Bob is remarkably like his father. He has the same square lumpy jaw that denotes aggressiveness and ability to take punishment. His mouth is exactly like his father's, with lower lip inclined to protrude. His chin is well rounded, his cheek bones broad and prominent, nose short and prominent, ears well set and neck broad and full from the shoulders to ears.

Bigger Than Old Bob.

Young Bob has his father's wide shoulders, wedgelike back and body; long arms and strong hands, and legs inclined to sway in a bit at the knees. The only difference is that in every measurement Young Bob is bigger.

If he has inherited the courage and instinctive fighting ability of his dad, he still has plenty time to fight for the heavyweight crown, which was won by Old Bob at an age when most heavyweight champs are gone and forgotten.

ZUPPKE IS IN FAVOR OF CHANGE IN RULES FOR GRID GAMES

BOB ZUPPKE.

Changes in football rules for the season of 1921 are suggested by Robert Zuppke, coach of the University of Illinois football team, to alter the execution of the forward pass. The wild season which has just ended with its orgy of last minute wins, of apparently beaten teams that pulled hopeless defeats out of the fire with forward passes, and the freakish result that was often the outcome of a game where too many passes were thrown have aroused several critics and coaches of the conservative eastern type to protest.

Percy Haughton, former Harvard head coach, offered as a suggestion to reduce the effectiveness of the pass and restore the running game to its position as the backbone of an attack, that all forward passes blocked before crossing the line of scrimmage should be considered as free balls, and might be recovered by either team as a fumble. This brought answer from other critics, who thought that such a change would only increase the freakish trend of the open game and would bring more scoring that were the results of breaks of luck and not of well executed attacking runs from scrimmage.

Coaches Talk Legislation.

Bob Zuppke gathered a group of coaches at the annual meeting of the National Collegiate Athletic association, which included A. A. Stagg of the University of Chicago, and Dr. Harry Williams of the University of Minnesota, both members of the rules committee, to discuss legislation regarding the forward pass.

"Illinois has won so many games with the forward pass in the nine seasons that I have been coaching there that no critics of the game can accuse me of wanting to abolish the pass or to limit its place in modern football," said Zuppke. "The forward pass has come to stay and the public considers it the most sensational part of the new game. But in the last two years its use has demonstrated that we can still make changes for its improvement.

Some Constructive Suggestions.

"One idea of mine is to limit the number of passes that may be thrown in each quarter. Perhaps six would be enough. This would make it impossible for a team to win by passes alone if it did not have a strong running game. Another suggestion would be to allow no runs after a forward pass was caught, which would make it necessary for a team to build up a powerful passing game to use consistently, rather than depending on one or two passes to win the game if the receiver could get into the open after the catch. An exception to this rule would be to allow a run on passes that did not cross the scrimmage line.

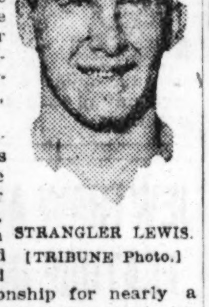
WRESTLING TITLE CHANGES HANDS TWICE IN YEAR

The heavyweight wrestling championship changed hands twice during 1920, Joe Stecher pinning Earl Caddock in a championship bout at New York Jan. 30 and Ed Strangler Lewis jolting the crown from the head of Stecher in a bout at Madison Square garden, New York, Dec. 13.



STRANGLER LEWIS.

The performance of Lewis was by far the most spectacular of the two bouts, for, although Stecher defeated Caddock, who had held the championship for nearly a year, his victory was not a great surprise, for wrestling fans of all sections of the country figured Caddock to lose the crown. Lewis' victory was hailed by many of the mat sport, for the Strangler has long beeen trying to achieve this objective.

Lewis also scored a victory over Caddock in 1920, tossing the former champion in 1:35:45 at Madison Square garden, New York, March 15. Stecher defeated Lewis in a bout in New York April 16, but only after more than three hours of hard grappling. That the Strangler should come back in his second match of the year with the champion and win the crown is hailed by many as one of the years' wrestling wonders.

Boosters and Tornadoes in Battle for Grid Title

With both teams strengthened, by the addition of stars from other elevens, the Thorn-Tornadoes and the Booster football teams will clash this afternoon at Dexter Park pavilion in the playoff of a tie game of last Sunday.

The T-N-T outfit will have Trafton, center of the Decatur Staleys; La Rose, end of the Cardinals, and Falcon and Annan, Tiger backfield men, in their lineup. The Boosters have signed Koenig, Great Lakes center.

In a curtain raiser, the Cornell A. C. and Hawthorne A. C. teams will battle for the city lightweight championship. The first game starts at 1:30 p. m.

Operation Is Performed on Gopher Track Star

Duluth, Minn., Jan. 1.—Frank Kelly, captain of the University of Minnesota track team, is recovering from an operation for appendicitis at a local hospital. He was visiting his home here when he became ill. It probably will be two months before he can resume track work, physicians said.

FRANK FARMER REVIVES.

Portland, Ore., Jan. 1.—Frank Farmer, veteran Tacoma light-heavyweight, scored a technical knockout over Harlan Bunker of San Francisco in the second round of a scheduled ten round bout today. Bunker's seconds threw in the sponge in the second round.

HARBERTSON TO WRESTLE LONDOS.

Ogden, Utah, Jan. 1.—Jim Londos, the Greek wrestler, and Jack Harbertson of Ogden will meet in a finish match at 180 pounds here Friday.

WHITE DEFEATS WEBB AT DAYTON

Dayton, O., Jan. 1.—Charley White, Chicago lightweight, beat Young Webb of this city in every round of their ten round go this afternoon before the Dayton Gymnastic club. White's punching was too much for the local boy, whom he had down for the count of six in the fourth round. White appeared in excellent condition.

COAST TILT ENDS GRID SEASON IN BLAZE OF GLORY

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Pasadena, Cal., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—The football season of 1920, waged so successfully on fields of the east, south, middle west, Missouri valley, Rocky mountain slopes, and the Pacific coast intercollegiate regions, lasted until the first day of the New Year before ending in a blaze of glory.

GEORGE GIPP.

It is no exaggeration to call the recent gridiron season the most successful in history. It established records in more aspects than one, The season was featured by games which, both east, west, and south, drew the largest crowds in the history of the sport.

The usual number of players of exceptional ability was brought out by the close and interesting struggles which paved the pathway of respective sectional championship claimant teams, and in many sections the end of the season disclosed clean cut title winners.

Forward Pass Sways Games.

Other features of the season were the striking tactics developed by different powerful teams in their efforts to outplay or circumvent their gridiron foes. The forward pass was unveiled as a weapon more formidable than in any preceding season. Used as a threat, or as a means of attack, the forward pass, when part of the repertoire of a smart and well coached eleven, provided the turning point of many a game.

Ohio State, in winning the honors of the western conference, particularly brought this means of attack into telling effect. Without the pass, Ohio never would have reached its championship goal.

Ohio States Deserves Laurels.

In contradistinction, the punting game was not up to the standard of former seasons. The onside kick was little used, and the toes of field goal kickers apparently did not play so large a part in swaying battles as in some previous years.

In the middle west Ohio won the undisputed championship of the Western conference. The Buckeyes, under the able coaching of Dr. Jack Wilce, pulled three games out of the fire when defeats were apparent. In winning these games the forward pass was called into commission in the closing minutes of play, with the result Wisconsin, Chicago, and Illinois succumbed to defeats.

Gipp's Death Lamented.

Notre Dame boasted of a player who was generally considered the most dangerous performer on a western gridiron. He is none other than George Gipp, the half back who could do anything the position called for. He could kick, run or pass, while his defensive qualifications were in accord with his offensive play.

Following the Notre Dame-Northwestern game, Gipp was stricken with pneumonia. The great player succeeded in beating this dreaded disease, but later succumbed to an attack of streptococcic throat infection

Five Unbeaten in East.

In the east Princeton was generally acclaimed as strongest, although Harvard, Pittsburgh, Boston college, and Penn State did not meet with defeat. Princeton was a powerful aggregation in every respect. In Keck, the giant tackle, the Tigers boasted the outstanding forward of the section. There was little about the position that Keck did not know and he was a tower of strength in all Princeton's games, especially against Yale and Harvard.

Honors in the Missouri valley conference were won by Oklahoma. This team played an unexpected brand of football, and instead of Kansas or Missouri fighting it out for the title, Oklahoma, a comparatively new member of the organization, stepped in and copped.

Georgia Tech won the southern championship in commanding fashion. Although defeated by Pittsburgh, the southerners won from all elevens in their section in such a manner as to leave no doubt as to their superiority.

TWO NEW FACES APPEAR IN RING'S GALLERY OF FAME

BY RAY PEARSON.

A noteworthy year in pugilism has flown, with two championship upsets, something that rarely happens in that span of time, Mike O'Dowd of St. Paul, middleweight, and Pete Herman of New Orleans, bantamweight, being the victims of the never ceasing onward march of the belligerent and ambitious young men who hanker to wear pugilistic crowns. That's why we have to make a pair of changes in the list of champions who started the battles of 1920 and place the names of Johnny Wilson and Joe Lynch among the crowned heads.

JACK DEMPSEY. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

Pugilism certainly enjoyed a most prosperous year. It was a season of fat purses, of big crowds, and favorable progress was made in many states which heretofore closed the door to boxing. New York is the fight center of the universe today. It is that because the year 1920 saw the passage of a legalizing measure for fifteen round bouts to decisions. It was the Walker bill that made this possible, and championship tilts are now allowed in Gotham, which give the fans what they want.

Wilson's Class Doubtful.

The installation of Johnny Wilson, the New England Italian, on the championship pedestal did not come about through a particularly meritorious performance. To the contrary, Wilson is not credited with being a great fighter. He captured the title May 6 on a referee's decision in a Boston ring after ten rounds of boxing, a decision which many believe was doubtful. But, doubtful or not doubtful, Mike O'Dowd lost his title and so we have Johnny Wilson for kingpin of the middleweight ranks.

Although Wilson won the title early in the year, he has done nothing of importance since. He engaged in three bouts with mediocre boxers and was not credited with making the sort of showing expected from a titleholder. His failure to appear more often in contests was attributed to a troublesome nose, which, it was stated, failed to respond to surgical treatment.

Herman's Tumble Belated.

Pete Herman nearly escaped dethronement, for it was not until Dec. 22 that he took the big chance which was a losing one, by boxing Joe Lynch, the hard punching New York banty.

He took that chance by entering a decision bout over the fifteen round route and thereby lost his title when the referee and two judges decided against him.

Herman might have seen the handwriting on the wall, for shortly before he met Lynch that boy had pulled the feat of knocking out Jack Sharkey in the fifteenth round.

But the lure of the money called the New Orleans Italian to the chance which made a new titleholder.

Dempsey Has a Busy Year.

World's Heavyweight Champion Jack Dempsey had a big year and among other things demonstrated he is one champion who wants to fight and will fight just as often as matches and sufficient inducements are offered. Dempsey was forced to travel a path of roughness not ordinarily the lot of a fighting man. Carried to trial early in the year on charges of wartime slacking, the champion of the heavyweights cleared himself in a San Francisco court, then started out to seek the popularity which had been his before the slacking charges were lodged.

Shows Well Against Miske.

The two battles fought by Dempsey in 1920 were against Billy Miske of St. Paul, and Bill Brennan respectively. Dempsey won both by knockouts. He met Miske at Benton Harbor, and punched Bill to sleep in the third round. It was a sterling performance; an exhibition of hitting power seldom seen in the ring.

The year was nearly finished when Dempsey clashed with Bill Brennan at Madison Square garden in New York, but this performance by the champion wasn't up to the standard and drew much criticism because he failed to crash Brennan to sleep until the twelfth round.

The excuse offered was that Dempsey was overtrained. It generally was admitted the champion wan't "right," for he took something of a beating before he managed to rock Brennan to sleep. Perhaps in his next encounter—with Willard—those at the ringside may see the real Dempsey. If this isn't true then Dempsey is taking a big chance, the chance of having the crown knocked off his brow.

Remunerative Year for Jack.

Financially the picking was sweet for Dempsey. With only two bouts he is credited with having pulled in something like $175,000. In his bout with Brennan, Tex Rickard paid the champion a guarantee of $100,000. Then there's a lot more coming when Jack hops into the ring with Willard and Carpentier.

A feature of the year was the appearance in this country of Georges Carpentier, war hero and champion of Europe. Carpentier came across to show his wares before an American crowd and Battling Levinsky of Philadelphia, a bit of a relic, was picked for the target. Levinsky was the target all right, for the Frenchman hit Bat with nearly everything but the old water tub before he crashed him to the canvas for the finish count in the third round.

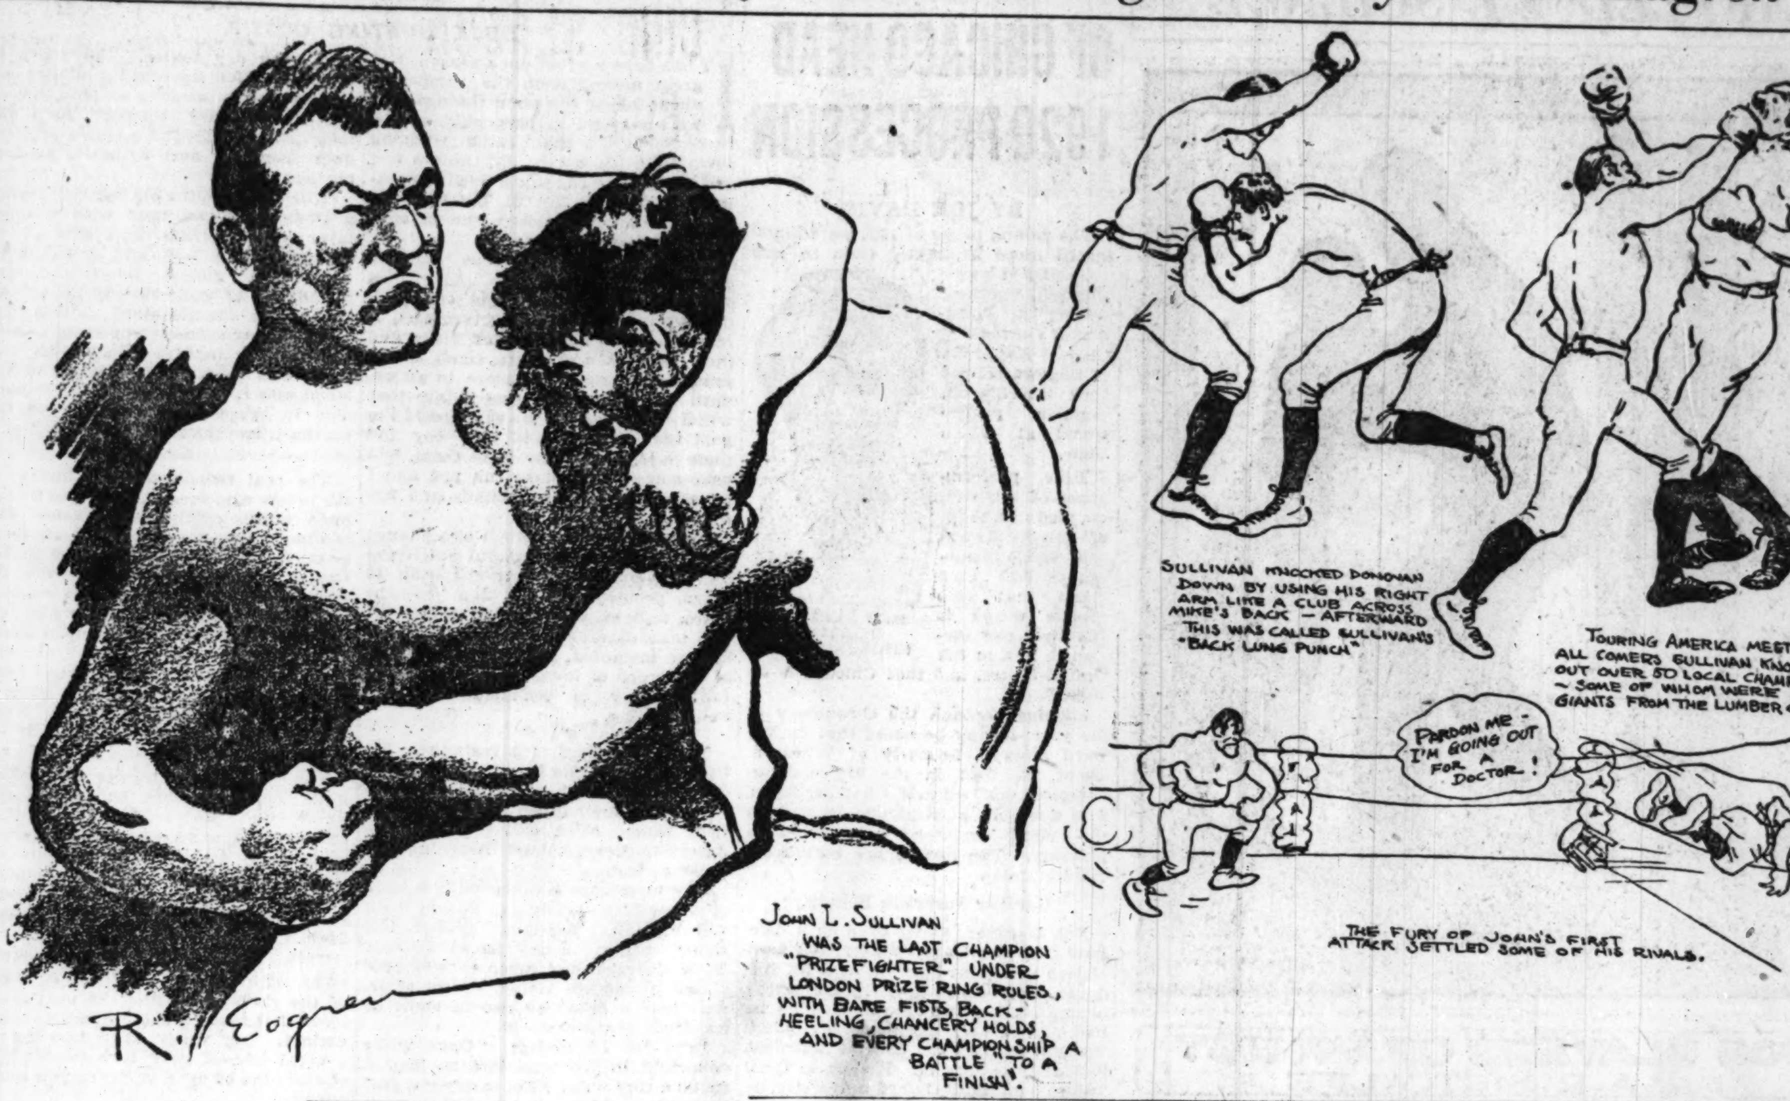
Open Air Bouts Popular.

It was noteworthy that summer boxing was given a big boom in the west as well as in the eastern section of the United States. Benton Harbor, the Michigan summer resort, has established itself as a boxing center, for in addition to the Dempsey-Miske bout which drew $135,000, Promoter Floyd Fitzsimmons staged a lightweight championship between Champion Benny Leonard and Charley White of Chicago. This bout pulled something like $45,000 at the gate and resulted in the knockout of White in the ninth round.

Leonard had a narrow escape from losing his title in that bout, for he went into the ring out of condition and White left hooked him through the ropes in the fifth round. But Benny came back with the "master mind" stuff after the upset and showed what a wonderful champion he is.

Leonard had a prosperous and highly successful year of it.

John L. Sullivan, Intensely American Fighter : : By Robert Edgren



R. Edgren
SULLIVAN KNOCKED DONOVAN DOWN BY USING HIS RIGHT ARM LIKE A CLUB ACROSS MIKE'S BACK – AFTERWARD THIS WAS CALLED SULLIVAN'S "BACK LUNG PUNCH"
TOURING AMERICA MEETING ALL COMERS SULLIVAN KNOCKED OUT OVER 50 LOCAL CHAMPIONS – SOME OF WHOM WERE GIANTS FROM THE LUMBER CAMPS
PARDON ME – I'M GOING OUT FOR A DOCTOR!
THE FURY OF JOHN'S FIRST ATTACK SETTLED SOME OF HIS RIVALS.
JOHN L. SULLIVAN WAS THE LAST CHAMPION "PRIZEFIGHTER" UNDER LONDON PRIZE RING RULES, WITH BARE FISTS, BACK-HEELING, CHANCERY HOLDS, AND EVERY CHAMPIONSHIP A BATTLE "TO A FINISH".

BY ROBERT EDGREN.

WHEN John L. Sullivan was a boy in Boston, half a century ago, he had one great ambition. He wanted to become a professional ball player. John might have been the Babe Ruth of those early days, and we might have been finding his picture in some old team lineup, decorated with a full crop of the whiskers then favored by big leaguers, if Prof. Mike Donovan hadn't visited Boston in 1878.

Mike Donovan was middleweight champion. There was little money in boxing when matches had to be held out in the woods. Mike was training for a championship bout, and raising his training expense money by giving a few exhibitions in different towns. A Boston friend suggested he might do well by taking on a local semipro ball player who had done a little scrapping. So John Sullivan was invited to "set to" with Donovan, four rounds. John came. At that time he was a husky youngster of 20, broad shouldered, 5 feet 10½ inches tall, weighing about 180 pounds.

Going Easy with Kid.

Being a world's champion middleweight, and a first class boxer, Mike Donovan thought he'd put the novice at his ease. He felt grateful to the boy, anyway, for appearing at his benefit. So he held out his hand to Sullivan before the bell, and said pleasantly:

"I'll let you off easy, young fellow."

"You'll be lucky if I don't break your neck," roared Sullivan.

Right there, in a line, you have the character of the man who afterward became the most famous world's heavyweight champion that ever held a ring title.

As for the bout, Mike Donovan outboxed Sullivan for a moment, when John L. suddenly rushed upon him with such fury that Donovan doubled forward to protect his body and raised both arms to defend his head. At this Sullivan brought his right arm down full length across Mike's shoulder-blades, the terrific force of the blow knocking Mike flat on his face, breaking his nose.

Friends for Many Years.

For years after that Sullivan and Mike Donovan were friends, and no one ever had greater respect for Sullivan's fighting ability than Donovan.

Sullivan's rise to championship honors was rapid. All fighting in his time was under London prize ring rules, with bare fists, both hitting and wrestling throws allowed, rounds terminating when either man was down.

Just after we had both seen Dempsey knock out Willard, I asked William Muldoon, who was long associated with Sullivan, how he would compare Sullivan with the new champion.

"Sullivan at his best and Dempsey today would make a wonderful match," said Mr. Muldoon. "Sullivan was the hardest hitter I ever saw, but I think Dempsey hits as hard. Sullivan at his best weighed 195 pounds to Dempsey's 183, but Dempsey is two inches taller and has a longer reach. Sullivan was a little faster and a better boxer, but his legs weren't as good as Dempsey's. I think with Sullivan and Dempsey in a ring the winner would be the man who got home the first heavy punch."

Game Different Today.

Boxing and other sports were on a different footing when Sullivan began fighting. Fighters and their followers were outside the law, to some extent, and championship matches with the "raw uns" were usually held out in the woods, in a hastily put up ring, after dodging the peace officers. Between fights it was the habit of fighters to dissipate heavily. Today the successful fighter is the cleanest living man in the world. Competition is hot, and no dissipated boxer can ever reach the top in his class. Sullivan, beginning at 20, reached and passed the top of his form at 24.

Compare his life with Dempsey's. Even when he has no match in sight Jack Dempsey is out on the road at daylight every morning for a run of several miles. Returning, he has a rubdown, rests, eats breakfast, and later in the day boxes several rounds. He goes to bed early. He never drinks liquor or smokes. He is as scrupulously careful of his physical condition as an ancient Greek champion under oath not to break training for a full year before competing in the Olympic games.

Oldtimers Didn't Train.

Sullivan drank heavily when not training, and trained as little as possible. He kept no regular hours. Frequently he fought without half getting into condition, depending upon the terror of his name and the fury of his first attack to beat an opponent down. His vitality was amazing.

He won his first thirty ring battles in 100 rounds of fighting—an average of three an done-third rounds for each fight. Among the famous heavyweights he beat were J. Donaldson, Steve Taylor, John Flood, Paddy Ryan, Jimmy Elliott, Tug Wilson, Charlie Mitchell, Herbert Slade, Alf Greenfield, Jack Burke, Dominick McCaffrey, and Patsy Cardiff.

This does not include his tour of the United Staets in 1883, lasting nine months, during which time he posted a standing offer of $1,000 to any man who could "stay" four rounds. He knocked out over fifty men who made the attempt, many of them in one round each. Even at this time Sullivan was paying no attention to training or condition, and had passed his best fightig form.

Fought Draw with Mitchell.

In 1888, at the age of 30, John L. fought a thirty-nine round draw with Charley Mitchell at Chantilly, France, in a cold rain and heavy mud, in a wood on a private estate. He was fat, and after a few rounds gave up chasing Mitchell and merely turned to meet the light footed Englishman's attacks and traded blow for blow until both were too weary to lift their hands.

Curiously enough Sullivan settled all arguments over his right to be called world's champion a year after this, knocking out Jake Kilrain in a terrific battle in the woods near Richburg, Miss., in seventy-five rounds. Owing to poor condition caused by heavy dissipation Sullivan came near losing this fight. In the middle of it he was desperately sick and vomiting at intervals, but kept on fighting with bulldog courage and outlasted his man.

Sullivan was intensely American in sentiment. He beat every Englishman he ever fought. When in his prime he went to England to force Smith, the English champion, to fight him. He went to the National Sporting club, where Smith was to box four rounds with Alf Greenfield. Sullivan was introduced to Edward, Prince of Wales.

Makes a Proposition.

"I've often heard of you," said John, thinking the prince might feel some embarrassment at meeting so famous a man as Sullivan.

Then John L. made a proposition.

"There's no use in Smith boxing that dub, Prince," he said. "He's in training to fight and I'm just off the ship, but put me in the ring with him and if I don't knock him out in three rounds I'll give him $1,000 and take the first ship back to America."

Wales asked Smith to accept Sullivan's offer, and Sullivan entered the ring, met Smith face to face, and repeated it, but Smith flatly refused, and avoided Sullivan during his stay in England.

Sullivan's ring career ended Sept. 7, 1892, when, fighting with gloves instead of bare fists, he was knocked out by Jim Corbett at New Orleans. When he reeled to his feet and faced the crowd with dazed eyes he made a characteristic speech:

"Gentlemen, I've fought once too often. I can only say I'm glad I was beaten by an American."

Becomes Sober Citizen.

Sullivan never fought again. In later years he became a sober and serious citizen, made a small fortune with a monologue on the stage, and retired to his farm at Lawrence, Mass., where his adventurous life recently came to an end.

Sullivan will never be forgotten. The great fighting of his early days and the reckless generosity with which he scattered a million dollars of his earnings, buying wine for the crowd or handing $100 bills to some poor old woman selling newspapers on a wintry street corner, added a glamor of romance to a career that will never be duplicated in these more prosaic times.

NATIONAL GOLF BODY STARTS MOVEMENT TO HELP GREENS' UPKEEP

BY JOE DAVIS.

The United States Golf association, which in the past has functioned largely as a maker of rules and manager of championship events, is about to enlarge its activities. Its opponents, principally those in the west, have claimed for many years that the U. S. G. A. was not national enough in its scope, and this first move appears to be the start of a reformation.

Realizing the importance of aiding in every way the proper upkeep and maintenance of American golf courses, the U. S. G. A. has created a greens section, to be conduced by the greens committee of the U. S. G. A.

Exchange Information.

By means of letters or a regularly published journal, it is intended to supply information regarding the value of seeds, the qualities and use of fertilizers, soil preparation, and other matters of interest. This will make available to all clubs the practices of green keepers throughout the United States.

This idea already has been utilized by the Chicago District Golf association and similar organizations in Detroit, Cleveland, and other cities, but there are numbers of smaller groups of clubs which are without this coöperative information.

Government Man Heads Body.

C. V. Piper and R. A. Oakley of the United States department of agriculture have accepted respectively the chairmanship and vice chairmanship of the greens committee. Others on the list are:

E. J. Marshall of Toledo, Dr. Walter S. Harban of Washington, James L. Taylor of Manchester, Vt.; C. B. MacDonald of New York, Fred Hood of Boston, Alan D. Wilson of Philadelphia, W. C. Fownes of Pittsburgh, Norman MacBeth of Los Angeles, W. P. Stewart of New Orleans, and W. A. Alexander of Chicago.

3 CUSHION SHARPS RESUME CITY LEAGUE TOURNEY THIS WEEK

With the various tournaments and holidays over, play in the fifth annual three cushion race of the Chicago Billiard league for the Blake cup will be resumed on a steady scale tomorrow night.

Ten games are scheduled for this week, opening with a clash between Jim Shea and Bert Tredick at McGarry's Lawndale room and a tilt between Louis Engel and Augie Kieckhefer at the Recreation.

Leonard Kenney, who as substitute for Charlie Morin, won the cup last year for the Recreation room, is playing for the Petersen hall this season, and is leading the league with three straight victories.

Owing to a recent attack of pneumonia—his fourth in six years—Charlie Morin will be out of the game for the winter.

Eugene Moreau, a promising west side youngster, has been selected as Morin's substitute at the Recreation. He will play forty-five points.

Finishing the nine mile course in 23:40, Monroe Nolan of the Franklin Skating and Athletic club, yesterday won the annual New Year's bicycle classic of the Franklin club. The course was laid out from Humboldt park to Austin avenue on North avenue.

Twenty-five started, and although no accidents occurred, several dropped out before the race was half finished. Melvin Edman of the Franklin club finished second; H. Hoffman, Franklin, third, and Roy Newhouse, unattached, fourth. The Alverno A. A. American Wheelman and Belgian-American were the other clubs represented.

The Cleveland Trap Shooters' association, which staged the Grand American last season, will make a strong bid for the 1921 event. The South Shore Country club of Chicago also is after it.

ENGLISH ROWERS AND RACERS MAY VISIT CORNELL U.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—A probable result of the visit to England of the Cornell university cross country team will be a trip to America next spring by complete track teams and boat crews from Cambridge or Oxford university, or both, to meet Cornell at Ithaca, N. Y. An invitation to this effect has been issued in the name of undergraduates of the American institution, according to Coach Jack Moakley of the Cornell squad.

Introduction of the English system of cross country running at Cornell, with inclusion of similar water jumps, plowed land, and hedges in the course, will probably be another result of the Cornell harriers' trip, said Coach Moakley on the occasion of his departure from London today.

The creditable showing made by the Ithacans at Roehampton, where they were defeated Thursday by an Oxford-Cambridge cross country team, 26 to 29, has given rise to the hope that the Americans would win a return match after training on courses similar to those used in England.

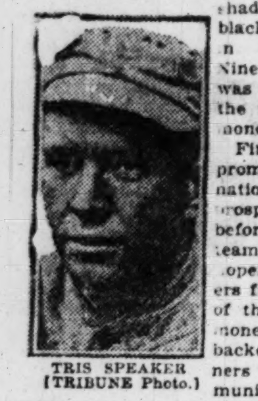
1920 WORST AND BEST SEASON IN DIAMOND HISTORY

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Over the picture of an otherwise brilliant baseball season falls the shadow of the blackest scandal in forty years. Nineteen-twenty was the best and the worst in diamond history.



TRIS SPEAKER
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Financially the promoters of the national pastime prospered as never before. Even the teams which were hopeless tailenders from the drop of the flag made money for their backers. The winners cleaned up munificently. The minor leagues, which were shot to pieces during the world war, came back with remarkable vitality and optimism, which was not without reason in the light of the monetary rewards.

Series Victory Popular One.

The major league campaign was crowned by the success of the most popular player manager and the most highly respected sportsman in the game when the world's championship went to James C. Dunn's Cleveland Indians, piloted into the premier honors by Tris Speaker against odds and under handicaps that were thought to be insurmountable even by their friends.

That is the bright spot in the picture.

In the background all the year was the shadow of the scandal of the world's series of 1919. Unbelievable as it was to the friends of baseball, the story persisted that the big fall derby of that year had not been won on its merits. The trail of the gambler was there, but those who followed it landed up a blind alley or on a merry-go-round which led nowhere except to the starting point.

"To the Well Too Often."

Emboldened by their success in that crooked deal, the gamblers overplayed themselves when they tried to double cross their own customers on a game between the Chicago Cubs and the Phillies in the latter part of August. The officials of the Chicago club, in an effort to block the supposed frame-up, changed pitchers at the last minute, and still lost the game, but on the level.

That led to a grand jury investigation in Chicago, in which officials of both major leagues coöperated to such good purpose that in the face of many legal obstacles the indictment of eight White Sox players and several others implicated in gambling were obtained as the result of confessions by three of the players.

Indictment Against Attel.

Cicotte, Williams, and Jackson admitted to the grand jurors that they had accepted money to "throw" the world's series of 1919, and in their statements they entangled Risberg, Gandil, Felsch, McMullin and Weaver. Abe Attel, a former pugilist, also was indicted as an alleged participant in the conspiracy as a result of these exposures.

Previous to the start of the season several National league players, among them Hal Chase, Heine Zimmerman and Lee Magee had been given unconditional releases by their clubs.

Realizing their own inability to clean house and wrest baseball from the grasp of the gamblers, the club owners got busy directly after the season closed and selected for the monumental task Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis of Chicago, a jurist whose fifteen years on the federal bench had made his name a nation wide synonym for the square deal, and who had been not only a baseball fan but a firm friend of the game all his life.

Season of Upsets.

The playing season itself was full of upsets. The White Sox in the American league and the Cubs and Giants in the National were disappointments. They were the pre-season favorites for the flags.

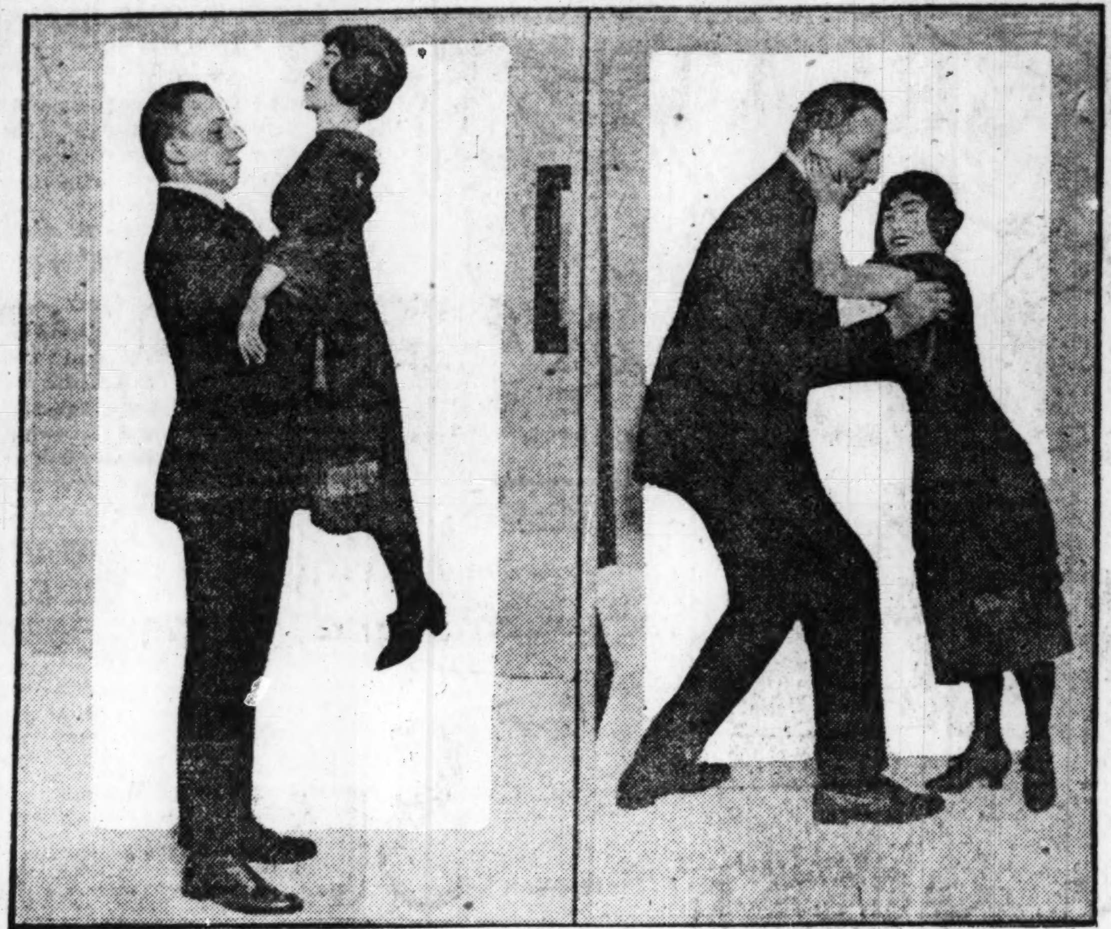
That the Cleveland team won out in the American league was a matter of congratulation to everybody connected with the circuit.

Sox Wrecked at Finish.

The White Sox went out and established in a few days after that tragedy a lead which was thought to be safe, but in a remarkably short time the Indians, with their intrepid leader, recovered their stride and came back into the lead. It is not too much credit to give them to say they probably would have beaten the White Sox without the scandal which wrecked Comiskey's team just before the finish.

STRENGTH BAFFLED BY SCIENCE

[Copyright: 1921: By Underwood & Underwood.]



THE feats of Johnny Coulon, the midget Chicago boxer, in puzzling the savants of Paris by making powerless the efforts of European strong men to budge him from the ground, brought no astonishment from Mrs. Hideo Kimura, wife of a New York physician from the land of Nippon.

According to Mrs. Kimura and the doctor, Coulon has learned the secret of scientific physical, not mental, control. Mrs. Kimura, who weighs 85 pounds, demonstrated by baffling the most earnest efforts of the 225 pound man shown in the picture in the right to lift her, when she willed. In the picture to the left the same man shows how easy it is to lift her without effort when Mrs. Kimura relaxes.

FOR PLAYERS OF WHIST

by A. R. METCALFE

ADVANTAGE OF FARSIGHT.

ABILITY to form a plan for the play of an entire deal is as essential as a knowledge of finesse. To think only of the proper card to play to the next trick is quite futile. Here is a deal of a common type which illustrates this point:

THE HANDS.

S—J, 10, 5.
H—9, 5, 4.
C—9, 7, 5, 2.
D—K, 7, 6.

S—A, 9, 7, 4, 2.
H—A, K, Q, 10, 6.

D—A, Q, J, 8.

S—K, Q.
H—8, 2.
C—A, K, Q, J, 6.
D—10, 9, 3, 2.

West dealt and bid two hearts, north and east passed, south bid three clubs, west three hearts, and the bidding closed. North had the initial lead.

THE PLAY.

10	H9	HJ	6C	HK
11	7C	D8	QC	9S
12	D7	DQ	D9	7S
13	DK	DA	D10	D5

West secured ten tricks.

The bidding was poor, but did not affect the result. It was certain from the outset that the declarer must lose one club and two spade tricks. Whether he took two or three tricks in the diamond suit did not matter.

By setting up his spades and then pulling the trumps, game was easy.

The only difficulty is that the play above is what it should have been and not what really happened. The declarer, in real life, pulled the trumps at the first opportunity, lost his last trump before the spades were established, thereby not only losing the game but his contract as well.

A COMMON FAULT.

The next deal was more difficult, but also illustrates a common error:

THE HANDS.

S—10, 8, 5, 2.
H—Q, 10, 9, 8, 2.
C—5.
D—K, 8, 3.

S—7, 4, 3.

S—A, 9.
H—K, 7, 6, 3.
C—8, 7, 2.
D—J, 9, 6, 5.

Score, 0-0. West dealt and bid one no trump, which closed the bidding. North had the original lead.

THE PLAY.

11	HQ	QS	9S	DQ
12	H10	D10	D9	7S
13	DK	KS	DJ	DA

West secured eight tricks.

At trick one, the declarer gave up the most important card in his hand. Had he kept the five of hearts as a card of exit, he could have thrown the lead to north after making his six tricks in clubs. Then north would have been obliged to lead up to the ace-queen of diamonds, giving the declarer nine tricks and game.

North was obliged to discard all of his spades, in this deal, in order to keep enough hearts to save the game. At trick nine it became necessary for north to unguard the king of diamonds, as the ace of spades was clearly in the south hand.

THREE GOLFERS OF CHICAGO HEAD 1920 PROCESSION

BY JOE DAVIS.

The golfing pages of 1920 were illuminated more brilliantly than in any year by three Chicago golfers, Robert A. Gardner of Onwentsia, Charles Evans Jr. of Edgewater, and Jock Hutchinson, popular professional at Glen View.

MISS ALEXA. STIRLING.

The performances of this trio, coupled with those of others from this section, substantiated the claim that the middle west is the strongest section in golf in the United States, and that Chicago is its hub.

Looking through the chronology of the year, it may be noted that D. Edward Sawyer, formerly of Wheaton, swept the field in the Metropolitan championship, while H. Chandler Egan, who was born at Highland Park, won the Pacific Northwest amateur championship. The honors are ours from coast to coast.

Gardner Surprises Britain.

Bob Gardner, going over as a delegate from the United States Golf association to a joint meeting with St. Andrews, took part in the British amateur championship, and despite the fact he had played only a few games before leaving, reached the final at Muirfield, Scotland, on July 11. He lost to Cyril Tolley, captain of Oxford university, at the thirty-seventh hole.

When word came that Great Britain was sending several of its leaders to try for the American amateur title international interest was keyed to a high pitch, but when the final roll call was made, "Chick" Evans of Chicago, and Francis Ouimet of Boston were the sole survivors.

Evans Beats Ouimet.

"Chick's" notable victory over the eastern star by a margin of 7 and 6, at Roslyn, on Sept. 11, stamped him as one of the greatest of the world's amateur players, and was something of a shock to thousands of eastern golfers, who had placed the Boston player on a little higher pedestal than that they gave Evans.

Earlier in the year, at Memphis, on July 17, Evans won the western amateur championship after defeating Bobby Jones of Atlanta in the penultimate round, 1 up. This was the crucial match of the tournament, as Evans outclassed Clarence Wolff of St. Louis, whom he defeated in the final, 5 and 4.

At Toledo, on Aug. 13, Edward Ray, the giant Englishman, scored a notable victory in the national open championship by a margin of one stroke in one of the strongest fields that ever competed in the classic.

It was a banner year for Jock Hutchinson, as, in addition to finishing second in the national open, he won the western championship at Olympia Fields on Aug. 5, and followed by taking the championship of the Professional Golfers' association at Flossmoor, Aug. 21, defeating Douglas Edgar of Atlanta, 1 up.

Premier honors among the women again went to Miss Alexa Stirling of Atlanta, who won the national championship at Cleveland, Sept. 25, by defeating Mrs. J. V. Hurd of Pittsburgh, 4 and 3. It was her third win of the title, and stamps her as the greatest woman player this country has produced.

Mrs. F. C. Letts Jr. of the Onwentsia club secured a like number of victories when she won the women's western event at Oak Park on Aug. 28 from Miss Edith Cummings of Onwentsia, 2 up.

WOODS and WATERS

by LARRY ST. JOHN

DUCK HUNTING GOSSIP.

IT has been a great duck season. Not great merely from the number of ducks killed, but from the few that were stopped in proportion to the immense hordes that came trooping down from the north. Of these a few will be killed in the south until the season closes there, Jan. 31, but with the southern markets closed, the number will not be considerable.

Early in the spring these immense flights will go north again, undisturbed by law abiding hunters, and will reach the breeding grounds in fit condition to rear families; both parent birds and their families will again come south, some to be killed, but more to go on, until we will again have flights that will literally darken the sky—gosh! I'm glad that my boy and your boy and their boys, when they have them, will have some of the same fun you and I have had in the duck blinds and flyways.

Ducks do not need much of a chance to thrive. Permit them to reach the breeding grounds in fit condition to breed, protect them a few months there, and most species of waterfowl will take care of themselves. Except in rare instances, they do not partake of the crops of farmers, so our waterfowl supply is self-sustaining and never failing.

Take a mallard, for instance. Sir Greenhead and his bonny brown mate can make a home and raise a family any place they happen to be that suits their fancy. You will find them in America, Europe, and Asia, as far south as India.

Any temperate country with a body of water large enough to float a duck will have its breeding greenheads. Every spring the city parks in New York, Chicago, and other densely populated places are visited by mallards, who rear a brood or two in sight of hundreds of people.

Says Dr. Hornaday: "Once while collecting in Montana late in May I found a tiny water hole, barely ten feet in diameter, hiding in the sunken head of a very dry coulee. For miles in every direction stretched a billowy sea of sage brush, already shimmering in the heat of early summer. As I dismounted for a drink up rose a mallard duck from her nest within a yard of my feet.

"The nest was the old familiar type—a basin of grass lined with a thick layer of down from the breast of the prospective mother, and a bunch of eggs that almost overflowed the boundaries of their resting place. As I gazed in astonishment at this nest and its contents beside an insignificant bit of water in a landscape that certainly was not made for ducks, I understood how it is that this bird has been able to spread itself all around the northern two-thirds of the globe."

The real two-fisted duck hunter is the fellow who does his shooting on the open waters of the great lakes. His is a he-man's game, with hardship from beginning to end, and danger at all times. Whether he travels the ice pack afoot or in a duck boat on runners, he is bound to get cold and wet and is lucky if he doesn't get drowned.

He either "works down" on the rafted ducks in his camouflaged boat or makes a blind of ice at the edge of the open water and used decoys. Either way it is cold work, but mighty interesting.

The "big water" hunter sees many birds that some duck hunters do not know exist. He probably is out after canvasbacks, red heads and scaups, but many a day he sees the American and Barrow goldeneyes, the old squaw ducks with their needle tails, the oddly colored harlequin ducks, the eider ducks and the scooters.

Then, too, when luck is breaking right, he may get a good shot at some of the rarer geese and the big shore birds that many old hunters think are extinct. Big water duck hunting is a great life—if your foot doesn't slip at the edge of open water or you don't weaken!

OLYMPIC WIN OF U. S. FEATURE OF YEAR ON TRACK

The victory of the United States team in the track and field meet of the seventh Olympic games held at Antwerp during August, and the establishment of two world's records by Chicago athletes at the meet were the features of the 1920 track and field season.

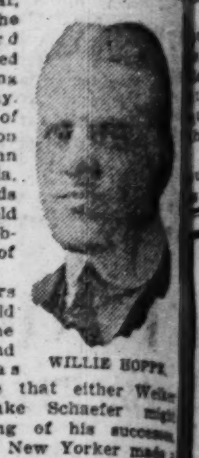
On Aug. 21 Frank Foss of the Chicago A. A. set a new record of 4.9 meters, 13 feet 5⅛ inches, in the pole vault, a mark expected to stand for some time. Frank Loomis, also a member of the Cherry Circle club, established a new record in the 400 meter hurdles, going the route in :54.

In the points standing at the Olympic meet, United States stood first with 212. Finland ranked second with 105; Sweden, third, 95; Great Britain, fourth, 85; and France, fifth, 34.

The Chicago A. A. scored a signal triumph in the National A. A. U. meet held at Cambridge, which also served as the official Olympic tryouts, by capturing the senior meet with a total of 35 points, just beating out the New York A. C. team by 2 points.

YOUTHS FAIL TO JAR 18-2 CROWN OFF HOPPE BROW

Two billiard champions, Wi Hoppe, the perennial balkline king, an Ralph Greenleaf, the boss of the pocket billiard players, retained their titles during the year's play. In the realm of the three cushion cushioners John Layton of Sedalia, Mo., now wields the scepter held for a year by Robert L. Cannefax of San Francisco.



WILLIE HOPPE

For fifteen years Hoppe has held sway among the balkliners and while it was thought possible that either Wel Cochran or Jake Schaefer migh break the string of his success the phenomenal New Yorker made clean sweep of his games against the in the series played in December at th Hotel Astor, New York City.

One Threat Against Hoppe.

Cochran made a sweep in the pre liminary series staged at San Francis in November, and with Jacob Schaefe who finished second, qualified for th final series in the east.

Only in one game did there appear possibility of Hoppe being dethrone that being the first in which he de feated Cochran by 400 to 370.

John Layton's win of the three cus ion title was one of the most notab feats in the annals of the game. H went through the preliminary seri at Chicago with ten wins and one de feat. It was an exceptionally stro field containing such players as Al fredo De Oro, John Daly, Pierre Ma pome, Augie Kieckhefer, and Clarenc Jackson, and the blonde Missouria knocked them all off with the exce tion of De Oro.

In the final series in which Layto Cannefax, Jackson, and Kieckhefe competed the first three tied at the e of the initial round, and in the playo Layton won from Jackson and then de posed Champion Cannefax, 75 to [illegible] 99 innings.

OLY RUSSIA'S OLD STIRS HOLY
HORROR OF U. S.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—[Spe- cial.]—Speculators in Russian gold who have imported it into the United States or are eager to do so to build up trade with soviet Russia are slowly coming to realize that the gold, even when melted into bars, has no value in this country.

Government mints are refusing to purchase or convert any gold which is of soviet origin. Unusual precau- tions are taken. Persons offering gold to the mints, for instance, may be re- quired to sign an affidavit swearing that none of it bears the soviet taint.

As a result the Russian gold has no purchasing power in this country and is of no value where credit or exchange transactions with the so-called soviet government are concerned.

It is a drug on the market. A carload of it would be a nuisance. Banks don't want it; commercial houses won't exchange commodities for it, because, while it is gold, the government position makes it worthless here.

Agents of the soviet government and others have endeavored in vain to obtain some assurance that the ban will be lifted. They find the lid is tight so far as the present administration is concerned.

It is said that there are several millions of Russian gold lying idle in banks and the hands of individuals in this country, and that plans to import many millions more had been developed.

Some have placed the amount of gold in the hands of soviet Russia at hundreds of millions.

Raymond T. Baker, mint director, today verified the reports that such gold is refused at federal mints and assay offices. The gold of any friendly country or any other country with which the United States is not technically at war is being accepted.

George W. Hotchkiss of Evanston, said to be the sole surviving '49er of the California gold rush, has lost his luck piece. It was an amethyst cuff button which he has worn every day for the last seventy years. It disappeared from his home, 1015 Elmwood avenue, and he has appealed to the newspapers to aid him in finding it.

TREATY REVISION AND REVIVAL OF EUROPE.

Andre Tardieu thinks that because Germany has been able to make good on certain terms of restitution and reparation amounting to a value of more than 20,000,000,000 of gold marks, the treaty of Versailles can be executed. Yet he holds the reparations commission is not doing its duty and calls its methods feeble.

We realize that this French viewpoint—fortunately there are other French viewpoints—is a natural product of a generation of Prussian menace culminating in a ghastly sacrifice of French manhood. To France's sufferings anything, almost, may be forgiven. But our sympathy for French emotion does not carry us with French policy. We have our own legitimate interest and it does not find itself safely founded on the treaty of Versailles, which Mr. Tardieu is so anxious to enforce, nor does it square with our common sense that in obedience to French hatred and fear, natural as they are, the allies or ourselves should thrust Germany farther toward ruin.

The day following the report of Mr. Tardieu's statement comes report of serious and growing unemployment in France. We do not have to turn to Mr. Tardieu for interpretation of this condition. It has its parallel even in our own relatively strong situation. There can be no restoration of European progress under the conditions imposed by the Paris treaty. You cannot have the natural economic framework of a great part of Europe broken into unnatural fragments as it was by the politicians of the peace conference without paralyzing the processes of European recovery. French unemployment will not decrease, but increase, while the economic anarchy created by the treaty persists. Great industrial areas cannot be violently torn from their tributary territories, agricultural lands shut off from markets, mines divided from factories, cities deprived of their hinterlands, age-old trade relations torn asunder throughout central Europe without carrying western Europe down to a common disaster greater by far than the war.

We realize the difficulties involved in a revision of the terms of the peace. Possession is nine points of the law, and accomplished facts are hard to undo. The Paris conference, dominated as it was, not by economic judgment but by political and military conceptions, scrambled the eggs. Who can unscramble them? Of course, no one can altogether set right the mistakes of Versailles. But the difficulties of correction are not greater than the difficulties of getting the world on its feet under existing conditions. On the contrary, they are less, and though a good deal of the mischief contrived at Versailles must go on and be paid for, a part of it has so demonstrated its evil by this time that we may hope a new conference might be able to undo it.

Revision would take place, for one thing, in a cooler, clearer air than that of 1919. If French sentiment remains obdurate, British and Italian and Belgian policies have grown wiser if not stronger. Last but not least, we have reason to hope that the influence of the United States would not be perverted and dissipated as at Versailles. Every nation in Europe looks to us for material aid. It should not receive any unless its policy squares with the needs of economic revival. The redrawing of the map to conform to economic sanity will be difficult and in great measure, we fear, impossible. But economic relations can be established through our pressure and that of the other nations, whose interest in world peace and economic restoration is paramount to considerations of military, political, cultural, and religious strategy.

Revision is, in our view, essential to European revival. It ought to be tried as soon as practicable.

FOR THE METRIC SYSTEM.

Senator Frelinghuysen of New Jersey has introduced a bill for the gradual adoption of the metric system of weights and measures. It is planned to have the transition period cover ten years, and then have the metric units as exclusive standards for the United States. It is realized that the adoption of the more exact standards cannot be violent, but it is thought that ten years will give time for readjustment and then the United States will be upon the sound basis of continental European countries.

Our soldiers learned that they could not get the precision and accuracy they required without the metric system. They learned what the consequences of inaccuracy might be and that accuracy cannot be had with the English system of inches and ounces, yards, miles, bushels, etc.

This is our traditional system and admittedly hard to break away from. It is in the dies and mechanical and legal instruments, in the history and imagination, in habit and use, and we stick to it with an almost religious affection, but it cannot be justified.

Possibly we are ready to begin the period of transition, possibly not. If we are not, the preparation should continue. Along with the metric system we are also for the twenty-four hour clock.

WAR IN THE AIR.

Col. Repington says in his diary that he found the United States firmly committed to the great successful military policy—that the infantry arm is the arm of decision. Our necessity may have been our wisdom. The only thing which can be extemporized at all is the infantryman. We were extemporizing. We produced what we could, infantry regiments trained as well as they could be trained.

They are what have won wars in the past on land and if experience is a guide to the future they will win wars of the future on land. Wars on the sea have been won by capital ships. The means of propulsion of the ships and the manner of throwing their missiles and the type of the missiles have changed, but the capital ship has won sea battles and the infantry regiment has won land battles.

THE TRIBUNE foreign service reports that British umpires have given a decision to an air fleet which attacked a fleet of ships. After dropping a smoke screen the airplanes dropped down upon the fleet and when the smoke cleared away eighteen airplanes were found riding low over each battleship. The umpires decided that the battleships had been destroyed.

We cannot tell what the uses of the airplane will be. We cannot tell whether supremacy is to be transferred from the sea to the air. It may be that the infantry regiment and the capital ship will remain the instruments of decision. We do know that if American aviation is developed to the highest point it can reach, whatever the future strategy of war may determine, the American air service will be in existence to be used by that strategy and that it is useless for us to speculate on the consequences of experiments unless we provide the effective force.

HARDING'S CABINET.

Mr. Henning gives us a glimpse into the difficulties of cabinet making in an article on the opposition to various rumored selections of department chiefs. So and so is opposed for secretary of state by the irreconcilables; so and so by the reservationists. So and so is opposed for the treasury by such and such influences; other candidates for other places are not liked by this interest or that faction.

Our own notion—and we hope it is Mr. Harding's—is that the choice of a cabinet should be ruled by Mr. Harding's own sense of what conduces to his harmonious and competent support. Mr. Harding is the crux of the situation and the cabinet officers are only his deputies. Can they and will they be disposed to work ably on the lines approved by him to accomplish the purposes he deems of first importance? That seems to us to be the real test and not whether or not any member is certain to be received with approbation by some faction in or out of congress.

We do not overlook the value of a cabinet which commands from the beginning the confidence and support of the leaders in congress and of public opinion, if such a cabinet could be chosen. But it is not, after all, how the government is received but how it performs that counts in the long run. Mr. Harding's is the responsibility for performance and he has the right to choose freely and to have his choice accepted faithfully until reason for objection is demonstrated by actual failure to produce desired results.

A cabinet of popular favorites, it is well to remember, is not necessarily or even likely to be the most efficient. Popular judgment and selfish interest are not very reliable guides to the efficiency required in the executive offices. Words and a certain taking personality count too much for popular favor, and the advocacy of an interest or faction may disclose a weakness rather than indicate strength.

Of course, we who are interested in the success of Mr. Harding's administration for the country's sake would welcome the strongest cabinet available from the viewpoint of public opinion. That would help. But the more important consideration is harmonious competence, loyalty to Mr. Harding's purposes and ability to further them. Results are what the country seeks and results will wipe out doubts and correct prejudgments.

Mr. Harding is not the man to appoint a cabinet and then ignore it. He believes in common counsel and team play. It is of great importance, therefore, that he have a cabinet that will give him the team play he seeks. We believe he will get it.

THE COUNTRY NEEDS CONSTABULARY.

Oscar Hewitt, writing of state constabulary, says that good roads need good police. The state has voted for good roads and must have them for its proper development, but a road not only connects the country production with city consumption but it connects the country with city criminality.

The city endeavors to handle its crime elements by a large police force. It endeavors to prevent crime by patrolling. The country has no patrol system. It has no force which can move quickly. Its protective measures may be sufficient for any disorders naturally arising in it, but they are not sufficient for disorders organized against it.

A local posse for the pursuit of criminals is of limited effectiveness and frequently slow in assembling and restricted in movement. Country police are said not to like the idea of the state constabulary, but that is foolish. A country community which was protected in itself against any possibility of a criminal raid would be uneconomically managed. The general policing of the state is a duty of the state, and the country people ought to demand such protection as their right. Good roads and fast driving open up the country to criminal raids, and the protection is best given by a body of state constabulary with men equipped to travel just as rapidly as the crooks and stationed where they can be on the job instantly.

It will encourage criminality to leave the situation as it now stands. The existence of an effective state force will be a deterrent. Opposition to the state constabulary from farmers and citizens of small communities is very unwise. They are no longer isolated from raids, although they are from relief.

Editorial of the Day

TO RESTORE SCARCITY.
[New York Times.]

Congress is merely pottering with the real problem of falling prices for farm products. Higher customs duties and embargoes only scrape the surface. The trouble is that we are suffering from an abundance of goods. If they were all destroyed, there would be work for all and prices would soar again to dizzy and happy heights. Then why not enact that they be destroyed—burned by the common hangman?

Take the item of wool. Senator Smoot states that a two years' supply—800,000,000 pounds—is now in storage in this country. In England there is $300,000,000 worth of wool in warehouses. What hope of sudden wealth for the sheep raiser is there with such an amount hanging over the market? It can't easily be consumed by the mills, so let it be consumed by fire. Then the lambs would begin to gambol again on a thousand hills, and the people would be once more in the felicitous state of wondering wherewithal they were to be clothed.

The same reasoning would apply all along the line. We are afflicted with a plethora. What we need is a dearth. While congress is about it, let it apply the plan of Thorough.

SONG.

As down the world we hasten,
  As hasten, love, we must,
The days that mar and chasten—
  They also star the dust;
With joys they wing the spirit,
  And if they flit and fade,
Their fragrances inherit
  The castles we have made.

And though our castles vanish,
  Our dreams of them abide;
And none their grace can banish,
  And none their glory hide.
Though all our ships of treasure
  Be lost in oceans vast,
Some dream shall fill life's measure
  With nectar, first and last.
LAURA BLACKBURN.

A LIBRARIAN confides to us that she was visited by a young lady who wished to see a large map of France. She was writing a paper on the battlefields of France for a culture club, and she just couldn't find Flanders' Fields and No Man's Land on any of the maps in her books.

REFERRING to Beethoven's anniversary, Ernest Newman remarks that "a truly civilized community would probably celebrate a centenary by prohibiting all performances of the master's works for three or five years, so that the public's deadening familiarity with them might wear off. That would be the greatest service it could do him."

NEWMAN, by the way, is a piano-player fan, contending that when the principles of beautiful tone production are understood, mechanical means will probably come nearer to perfection than the human hand. Mr. Arthur Whiting, considering the horseless pianoforte some time ago, was also enthusiastic. The h. p. is entirely self-possessed, and has even more platform imperturbability than the applauded virtuoso. "After a few introductory sounds, which have nothing to do with the music, and without relaxing the lines of its inscrutable face, the insensate artist proceeds to show its power. Its security puts all hand-playing to shame; it never hesitates, it surmounts the highest difficulties without changing a clutch."

PURR-R-R-R!

Sir: The most useful thing I learned from the Line was how to hiss such words as "mollycoddle," "foiled," and "no." Will you now take up purring? Mr. Shackleton, in his Book of Chicago, says we speak reverently of the Skokie marsh. The word Skokie, he says, is purred softly. Please start the purring.

Silencing silence, 'til a spired spruce shakes

Its vigil and with grasp relaxing breaks
The threads that pulled the puppets of its show.
No droning summer's drowsiness could hum
Such a caressing dreamful lullaby,

And kindly close each tired insomnious eye,
As does this snow-blurred evening's low curfew

FOR STUDENTS OF FOODS.

THERE are two groups of people who are interested in knowing about the amount of starch and sugar in foods. The first is the diabetics and those who do not have but are anxious to avoid that condition, because they know it to be a racial or a family weakness.

The second is the obese or those who fight fat because they know that for them obesity waits just over the hill. Perhaps the tribe of pimpled belong in the suburbs of one or both these groups.

Dr. C. E. Cornwell has prepared a table published in the Journal of the American Medical Association which many of those in these groups will want to paste up over the eating table. This groups a few hundred foods into ten groups on the basis of the amount of starch contained in each ounce. The table also gives the amount of fat and of protein and the number of calories.

In the first group are foods free from carbohydrates and eaten for fat and protein and for variety and stimulation. They are cooked lean meat, poultry, cooked lean fish, eggs, cooked bacon, cheese, butter, olive oil, coffee, tea, cocoa shells, broths, whisky, and special flours made from casein. None of these contain any starch or sugar.

The second group has fifteen grams or less to each ounce. They are such cooked vegetables as celery, marrow, tomato, okra, leeks, chard, asparagus, Brussels sprouts, spinach, cauliflower, cabbage, beet greens, dandelion greens, string beans, egg plant, sauer kraut, such raw vegetables as lettuce, endive, cabbage, tomato, celery, watercress, cucumber, radishes, grapefruit, lemons.

The third group is composed of foods of high food value, containing fifteen grams or less of carbohydrates to the ounce. Cottage cheese (20 per cent), oysters, clams, butter, nuts, olives.

Group 4 he calls the milk group. While milk contains little sugar when the amount of the fluid consumed in a day is considered, the total intake of sugar is considerable. The foods of this group contain between 15 and 22 grams of carbohydrate per ounce—milk, skimmed milk, and buttermilk.

Group 5 is composed of vegetables, fruits and nuts, with 23 grams of carbohydrates to the ounce. If eaten they should be taken in smaller quantities than in the case of foods in Group 2—cooked vegetables, beets, carrots, squash, onions, turnips. Raw vegetables—onions, turnips, oranges, peaches, pineapple, watermelon, mushmelon, strawberries, blackberries, cranberries, Brazil nuts, hickory nuts, pecans, filberts.

Group 6 contains vegetables and nuts with 60 grams of carbohydrates, also oatmeal porridge—cooked vegetables such as green peas, parsnips, apples, pears, cherries, apricots, huckleberries, raspberries, walnuts, almonds, oatmeal porridge.

Group 7 contains 75 grams of carbohydrates. Cooked vegetables, such as green Lima beans, green corn, plums, baked apples, boiled prunes, wheat, cereal porridge, boiled macaroni.

Group 8, 90 grams. Baked and boiled potato, boiled rice, banana.

Group 9, 270 grams carbohydrate to the ounce—bread, dried beans.

Group 10, 300 grams to the ounce—crackers, dry oatmeal.

W. H. Olmstead has recently confirmed the observations of Hodgson, Allen, and others that by cooking vegetables in three waters the starch and sugar contained in them is reduced to about one-tenth what it was in the raw vegetables. He proved this with cabbage, cauliflower spinach, and lettuce.

SOME FOOD CAUSES HIVES.

J. L. K. writes: "I have had hives for three or four years. I visited many doctors without results. Please give me a remedy. I drove the hives out with sulphur ointment and carbolic water. I bathe and keep myself clean."

REPLY.

Sulphur ointment will not help with hives nor will carbolic water. Hives is not a blood disease nor is it contagious. Keeping your skin clean will not cure it. The chances are that something you eat causes it. If you can find out what this is and thereafter avoid eating that particular food you will never have hives again.

MUST TAKE PRECAUTIONS.

A. M. writes: "I live in a four family house, two on a floor. Our next door neighbor has a little girl sick with scarlet fever. Is it safe for an adult to visit us without carrying it home to his children?"

REPLY.

It is safe assuming that he keeps away from your neighbors—does not go into their flat.

WHEN STOMACH MOVES ABOUT.

C. M. writes: "Is it possible for the stomach to 'drop' out of normal position low enough to interfere with the free flow of bile into the intestines, causing regurgitation of same into stomach? Could this condition cause a considerable disturbance of the nervous system? Can it be helped or cured?"

REPLY.

It is very easy for the stomach to sag down. Since it has been the custom to examine the stomach with X-rays physicians are finding the stomach in the lower part of the abdomen not infrequently. It may drag down enough to kink the bile duct. However, prolapse or sagging does not cause anywhere near so much trouble as it was charged with before the policy of spying on it with X-rays was started.

HAVE DOCTOR FIX DIET.

T. B. writes: "1. What are the symptoms of diabetes?
"2. What is the cause?
"3. Is there any cure for it?
"4. What should be eliminated from the diet?
"This concerns a man 74 years old and otherwise as healthy and active as a man of 45."

REPLY.

1. Thirst, itching, boils, loss in weight, frequent urination, abundant, heavy urine, sugar in the urine. These are the most prominent symptoms.
2. There are different kinds of diabetes. Some cases are due to disease of the pancreas, others to disease of the liver, others to disease of the brains. The most frequent cause is prolonged overeating of sugars, sweets and starchy foods in general.
3. The cure consists in living just as the doctor directs.
4. Elimination of foods made from grains of different kinds ranks first. Elimination of foods made with sugar ranks second. But have your physician lay out a diet for you and get one of the small books on diabetes and proceed to carry out instructions. Diabetes in a man of 74 is not so serious as the same disease is in a young person.

SKIN IN NEED OF GREASE.

B. M. C. writes: "Will you please tell me what to do for an extremely dry skin? At all times my skin is dry, rough, and scaly, but in the winter it is more so than at any other time. It is most embarrassing and I will try anything you suggest."

REPLY.

There are skin diseases which are characterized by dryness of the skin. A common name for one of these is "fish skin." If you have any such disease you had better have a skin specialist do what he can for it. The amount of grease secreted by the glands of the skin decreases as people get on in years. Hence the leathery skin of the old. Warm weather increases the secretion of the skin by both water and grease. In cold weather both secretions are decreased. Many practically normal skins need to be greased a little in winter. Perhaps you belong to this group. If so you may need nothing more than a little grease locally applied. Use whatever grease or ointment or so-called skin food you prefer.

THE SMOKE OF JOY.

Chicago, Dec. 30.—[To the Friend of the People.]—I would like to call your attention to the smoke coming form the flat building at the corner of Arlington place and Geneva terrace. E. H. C.

Respecting the complaint against premises at Geneva terrace and Arlington place, I have to advise you that an investigation was made by an inspector from this department, as a result of which a notice was served on the owner to abate nuisance of smoke from chimney of this plant within twenty-four hours. PAINFUL SUSPENSE.

Chicago, Dec. 30.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Six months ago thieves got away with $135 worth of my property in a city several hundred miles away. The police were notified, but were unable to recover same. I am now informed by a friend living there that he knows who has my property and also the identity of the thief, who does not suspect that he is known. How can I recover my loss without going back? J. C. A.

If your friend knows all the facts his testimony might be sufficient. We are not in a position to advise to advantage.

Chicago, Dec. 30.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Please inform me when the final installment of the French indemnity was paid by France to Germany.

The final installment of the war indemnity was paid on Sept. 5, 1873, and France was completely evacuated by the Germans on the 13th day of the same month.

LIBERTY BONDS.

Chicago, Dec. 30.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—While a member of the United States army, I subscribed for a $100 bond, paying for same by monthly allotment. Owing to a decision of the treasury department that no bonds would be delivered to soldiers in the A. E. F., I was forced to name some party to whom I wished delivery of bond to be made for safe keeping. Upon my return home I found that this bond had been disposed of without my consent and all that I have to show for it is that they owe me $100. Which would be the best procedure for recovery, making claim upon the government or suing? The bond was sent by registered mail and I also understand that it could not be disposed of without my signature.
ARTILLERY.

Depends upon whether the bond was registered or not, on whether your name was forged, on the wording of the document in which you named the custodian, etc. We advise you to place the matter in the hands of some attorney.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

OLD STUFF, BUT STILL GOOD.

Chicago, Dec. 26.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Louis Kossuth visited Washington, D. C., in compliance with an official invitation, and in due time paid his respects personally to Henry Clay, still confined to his sick chamber, when, after mutual interchange of civilities, Mr. Clay said among other things:

"By the policy we have adhered to since the days of Washington we have prospered beyond precedent; we have done more for the cause of liberty in the world than arms could effect; we have shown to other nations the way to greatness and happiness, and if we continue united as one people, and persevere in the policy which our experience has so clearly and triumphantly vindicated, we may in another quarter of a century furnish an example which the reason of the world cannot resist. But if we should involve ourselves in the tangled web of European politics, in a war which we could effect nothing, and if in that struggle Hungary should go down and we should go down with her, where then would be the last hope of the friends of freedom throughout the world? Far better is it for ourselves, for Hungary, for the cause of liberty that, adhering to our wise, pacific system and avoiding the distant wars of Europe, we should keep our lamp burning brightly on this western shore as a light to all nations than to hazard utter extinction amid the fallen or falling republics of Europe."

Pretty good doctrine in those days, and pretty good doctrine now to my way of thinking. D. M. STEVENS.

URGING EVOLUTION TO AVOID REVOLUTION.

Chicago, Dec. 28.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—It is perfectly self-evident, I believe, that the fundamental cause of our present ridiculous economic tangle (factories shutting down with millions half clothed and starving) is the inability of manufacturers to continue producing unless an immediate market is available for their output. The coal shortage every year (a situation so ridiculous that it would be laughable if not so serious) is clearly an example; the closing of woolen mills in America, when nine-tenths of our population probably cannot afford the price of woolen products, is another example.

The ill seems to be "constitutional" in our economic system. We are doping ourselves with pills and salves in the form of complicated foreign credit arrangements, tariffs, and the like, when the real trouble, which lies deeper, receives never a thought.

Our dyspeptic economic system still clings to its way of doing things much as the two legged counterpart hates to give up his coffee, pies, meats, and stimulating drugs. Our economic system seems doomed to change very soon—it probably lies very largely with the big interests of the country whether it dies a horrible death as it did in Russia, or whether they will allow it to be reformed before it is too late, in an evolutionary rather than in a revolutionary manner.

LACK OF TRANSPORTATION AS A CAUSE OF FAMINE.

Ayr, N. D., Dec. 28.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—In your leading editorial, Sunday issue, Dec. 26, you enumerate several reasons for the starvation conditions now existing in China, but fail to mention the chief cause, which is the absence of any means of swift transportation. In the famine stricken provinces there are no railways, no highroads, no vehicles, if there were roads, larger than the Chinese wheelbarrow. Nearly everything is moved in boats on canals, the boats being pulled along by coolies or propelled by a single oar over the stern.

Years ago, when the Rocky mount custs ate up everything green in Ka trainloads of food were rushed int state and the inhabitants saved starvation. I remember seeing a freight train going over the Fort W road at that time loaded with food other stuff for the Kansas folks, a the side of every car, reaching th length, was a representation of a grasshopper! No doubt there is en rice in China to relieve the famin it can't be taken to them. If Hoover were to land unlimited foo all kinds, say, in Shanghai, the fa would go on just the same, becaus would be no way of getting the fo the victims of the famine or the sta people to the food. EXPANSION AS TRAFFIC SOLUT

Chicago, Dec. 28.—[Editor of The T une.]—While Mayor Thompson's su plan appears plausible enough it wi accomplish the desired results, subways are not the solution of our trouble, which is congestion of our ness center.

It is a foregone conclusion, daily onstrated, that more transportatio converging to and concentrating central point, will inevitably resul congesting said point with excess tr This is an indisputable fact alread force in Chicago. The centralizin all lines of traffic cannot ever be a edy for congestion. Expansion is sale, practical, and sane remedy.

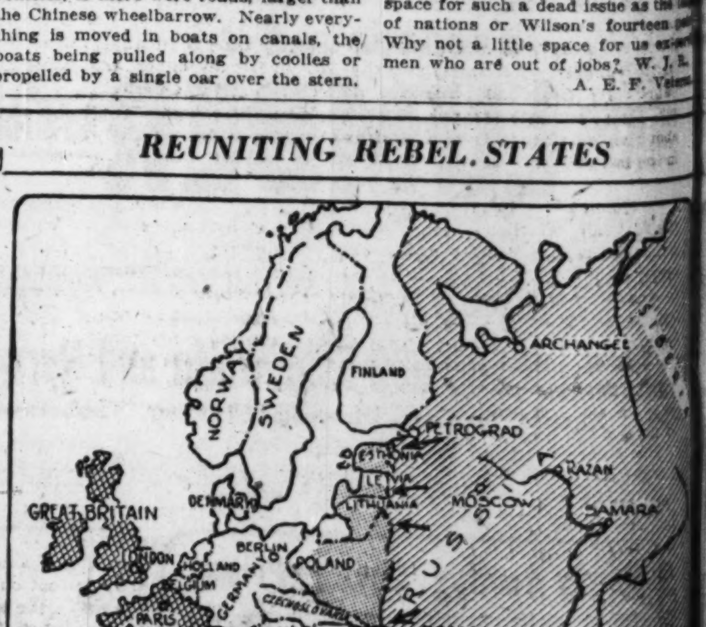
REUNITING REBEL STATES



Internal strife is ended in Russia, for the first time since the Red régime started. The long list of protected generals and favored states set up by governments hostile to bolshevism is ended because there are no new names to add.

Reports from Russia indicate that a second phase may be opening, the bringing back into the empire of those portions which have broken away by their own strength to become independent units. TABLOID BOOK REVIEW

BY FANNY BUTCHER.

Last week's best sellers in a leading Chicago book store were:

FICTION.

"In the Mountains" [Doubleday Page].
"The Age of Innocence" [Appleton], by Edith Wharton.
"Mary Wollaston" [Bobbs Merrill], by Henry Kitchell Webster.
"Main Street" [Harcourt, Brace & Howe], by Sinclair Lewis.
"Potterism" [Boni & Liveright], by Rose Macaulay.
"Lady Lilith" [Doran], by Stephen McKenna.

NONFICTION.

"Outline of History" [Macmillan], by H. G. Wells.
"Tales of a Vanishing River" [John Lane], by Earl H. Reed.
"Book of Chicago" [Penn], by Robert Shackleton.

The six best circulators at the public library last week were:
"Mary Wollaston," by Henry Kitchell Webster.
"Potterism," by Rose Macaulay.
"Main Street," by Sinclair Lewis.
"Margot Asquith: An Autobiography."
"Outline of History," by H. G. Wells.
"White Shadows in the South Seas," by Frederick O'Brien.

"THE WOMAN WHO WAITS," by Frances Donovan, is labeled "a study in sociology." It is, more actually, a study in the human nature of a class quite apart, in the psychology of a group consciousness, with a sociological twist given to the study by the author.

Frances Donovan was interested to know what the waitress was waiting for, what the seething caldron of her spirit was brewing in the way of human relationships. She worked as a waitress, wrote as she worked, and when she had finished her investigations and her notes, made a book of them.

It is badly written from the point of view of literature. The chapters have no coherence; the whole work no cumulative dignity. But from sheer human-downrightness it is something worth reading and pondering upon.

It is the sort of book that leaves one sick at life somehow—at the dumbness, the driven-cattle attitude toward the world that—of course—keeps the machinery of our little universe agog. The tawdry acceptance of ephemeral glitterings, the complete absence of any of the eternal verities, not so much man's inhumanities to man as man's indecencies to man, spiritual indecencies, and the unforgivable sin of accepting a painted bauble for the rainbow-lovely bubble of beauty. Well, as Mr. Santayana would never say, that's that.

Frances Donovan thinks that, with all of the winnings stacked in front of them, the pile of the woman who waits is higher often than the pile of the woman who waits at home; that she is a freer and honester soul, more independent, less crafty; that her compromises with life are of a different type, but no less degrading than the compromises made by women in other and more respected occupations.

"Bits of Life" [Brentano] is said to be by a prominent Wall street man, whose identity is thus thoroughly shrouded. It is an expression of the essence of a prominent Wall street man's attitude toward life—if he has any brain at all beyond the peculiar twist of money-making.

The "Bits" begin with a litany of his loves, which include all of the obvious natural things like sunrises and moonlight and "tender green things," and the less customary "women's slender ankles" and "blood that turns to flame" and "red roses and red lips."

Then comes his hates, which are for turnips and thick cups and saucers and "people who continually hurt one another in obeying the other nine commandments" and "unavoidable fat" (page Dr. Donnelly).

After that he sketches, sometimes cleverly, sometimes just obviously, people whom he has known. They are better than most of the so-called "bits of life."

For those who like to feel all the spine-tickling thrills of the r's in their g-r-r-r-uesome stories there is a volume warranted. "Silent White and Beautiful," it is called, after the first story in the book—the story of a few snappy and artistic murders and the ironic capture of the murderer. Tod Robbins writes stories of horror with much more casualness than used to characterize Eleanor H. Porter and her glad books. Handsome horror, I calls it.

"All Things Are Possible" is a volume of short, very short, essays into the realm of literature, philosophy, life in general, by Leo Shestov, a man who is, according to D. H. Lawrence, who writes a forceful foreword to the volume, peculiarly characteristic of the Russian intellectual kultur. I quote a paragraph which sums up the book infinitely better than I could.

"He preaches nothing; so he protests time and again. He absolutely refutes any imputation of a central idea. 'Everything is possible'—that is his central cry. It is not nihilism. It is only a shaking free of the human psyche from old bonds. The positive central idea is that the human psyche, or soul, really believes in itself, and in nothing else."

"All Things Are Possible" only for the reader of super-normal intelligence. To the right person, this book is a treasure trove; to the subnormal it is just words, and to the normal it is amusing.

J. S. Fletcher is one writer of mystery tales upon whom one can depend for a really mysterious tangle which will not insult one's intelligence. Too many so-called mystery stories are mysteries for the first ten pages, until all of the characters are described, and immediately their shroud is rent from them by any really perspicacious reader. Mr. Fletcher keeps you really guessing. His "Dead Men's Money" is the latest one, with the mystery guaranteed not to shrink in the reading.

"Black Bartlemy's Treasure," Jeffery Farnol's stirring novel of the rollicking sea, or his rollicking novel of the stirring sea, has been in his mind these many years, he says. In 1910 he wrote the opening chapters, but put it aside—as Conrad did "The Rescue." This is Mr. Farnol's first story of the sea, and not, so sea-sharks say, obviously so.

"Sham," by Frank G. Tompkins, is the first of the Stewart and Kidd Modern Plays, a series of one acters which have been successfully produced in the little theaters. The plays are under the general editorship of Frank Shay, who used to have that attractive little bookshop under the Liberal club in New York. Mr. Shay is still at work on the "Fifty Contemporary One-Act Plays" which he is compiling with Pierre Loving. It will be, if it ever actually appears—it has been promised for months—the most important collection of one-act modern plays available. It will contain representative work from every civilized country.

Moffat, Yard & Co., who have made of an unknown Norwegian writer one of the best sellers in America and have done it all almost in the flash of a telegraph message (comparatively), have just published a translation of a critical biography of their Norwegian prodigy. It is called "Johan Bojer, the Man and His Works." It contains not only the translation of the Carl Gad treatise but an introduction (short and not critical) by Llewellyn Jones and criticisms (reprints of the reviews which they wrote at the time of its appearance) of "The Great Hunger," by John Galsworthy, Joseph Hergesheimer, and James Branch Cabell. Mr. Bojer has postponed his lecture tour of America until the fall of 1921 (doesn't it look strange, that 1?). When he returns to America his book about us will already have won us or alienated us forever. It will be published in the fall and will—as they all do!—tell us the truth about ourselves.

"Momma" is Rupert Hughes' latest volume of short stories, named for the first tale, which is a sort of new science of healing—with the laying on of hands by beauty doctors and snappy couturieres. Momma, a victim of an obscure and elusive malaise, after vain visits to local practitioners is hurried off to New York to be cured by a specialist in an innard whose very existence she had never suspected. Visiting an old and understanding friend, she has her country culture subjected to a sea change, with such invigorating results that she forgets all about her remote pains. The story ends with Momma giggling after Papa had jocosely suggested that their daughter would say she ought to be ashamed of herself, all dressed up like a fashion plate—"I'm so ashamed of myself I'm proud of it."

"The Story of Style" is a pschoanalytic study of Woodrow Wilson by William Bayard Hale. It is a volume at once interesting and terrifying. It is interesting because it is the first psychoanalysis of a style—so far as I know. It is terrifying because it places a taboo on any exuberance of spirit in print. The time was when, if we refrained decently from telling our dreams, the psychoanalysis goblins didn't get us. Now we have to watch out not only for our dreams but for our written words. They will probably see in the simple histories of our Sunday book-school some complex of horrid mien. Life is getting so complete these days that there's little use in doing anything but just wait for the eternal solution of the twisted complexes.

The Authors' league is preparing a book for the benefit of its fund for needy authors. It is to be a compilation of the confessions of all the best known writers in America about their first literary efforts, published and unpublished. It will be called "My Maiden Effort." As yet no publishing firm has succeeded in landing the handsome and succulent fish which "My Maiden Effort" will be in the book selling world. Perhaps the league will publish it themselves. Anyway, it's going to be one of the most popular books in America when it actually appears.

Ford Madox Hueffer is, according to his recent articles in the English Review, bidding farewell to literature. If we may only hope that he will be like some famous farewellers of the stage, his departure from the halls of the clanging and declaratory world needn't be taken seriously. Parting is such sweet (and remunerative) sorrow that they would say farewell till it be morrow. If he has stopped writing, English literature has lost one of its most precious possessions. Do you remember his poem "On Heaven"? It was one of the finest things that was done during the war.

Goethe, when he was 15 years of age, finished a manuscript dealing with the history of Joseph. Three years later he spoke of it, in a letter to his sister, as an early attempt to embody a Biblical subject in verse, a sin, "only to be expiated by passing through the flames." "Joseph," as a manuscript, was regarded as lost to posterity forever. Prof. Paul Piper of Hamburg has just proclaimed its discovery. It is composed in Alexandrines and contains over 5,000 verses. It came into his possession over twenty years ago from a nonliterary friend who did not know either the authorship or the character of the manuscript. Only recently has the mystery been solved. A few of the verses have been printed in Germany and have aroused much criticism. The general opinion seems to be that even of a genius at 15 too much cannot be expected.

POEMS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY, LIKE THE NIGHT.

By Lord Byron.

She walks in beauty, like the night
  Of cloudless climes and starry skies,
And all that's best of dark and bright
  Meet in her aspect and her eyes,
Thus mellow'd to that tender light
  Which heaven to gaudy day denies.

One shade the more, one ray the less
  Had half impaired the nameless grace
Which waves in every raven tress
  Or softly lightens o'er her face,
Where thoughts serenely sweet express,
  How pure, how dear their dwelling place.

And on that cheek and o'er that brow,
  So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,
The smiles that win, the tints that glow
  But tell of days in goodness spent—
A mind at peace with all below,
  A heart whose love is innocent.

FARMERS FIGHT HAVING TO OBEY ANTI-TRUST ACT

Oppose Trade Commission Supervision.

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

J. R. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau federation, yesterday, on his return from a trip to Washington, issued a statement declaring that the regulatory power over farmers' coöperative marketing associations should be in the hands of the United States department of agriculture rather than of the federal trades commission.

Tells of Needs.

He also declared that:

The farmers' coöperative marketing movement must not be hindered by the provisions of the Sherman act.

The federal reserve act should be amended so as to provide preferential rates for loans for productive purposes over loans for speculative purposes.

The warehouse act should be extended so as to serve the needs of both individuals and coöperative associations, and there should be based upon it a rural credit plan which will enable the farmer, individually or collectively, to market his crops in an orderly fashion.

The federal bank system should be extended to provide the farmers with personal credit, for such purposes as buying improved seed, live stock, machinery and equipment, on the same plan as real estate loans are now provided.

Before Senate Committee.

President Howard and Grey Silver, the bureau's Washington representative, appeared before the joint committee of agriculture and banking and currency of the United States senate and gave the farmers' views. The entire marketing program for the farmers was discussed, and it was agreed that a more direct marketing system must be had.

Concerning the Capper-Volstead bill, Mr. Howard said:

"The Capper-Volstead bill passed the senate with two amendments which virtually nullify the intent of the act. The American Farm Bureau Federation is working with the conferees with the hope of having the amendment reconsidered and canceled.

"The first amendment to which we object puts the regulatory power over coöperative associations in the hands of the federal trade commission, rather than the department of agriculture. It would be better for all concerned to have the distribution of food supplies under the supervision of the department of agriculture.

"The second amendment virtually nullified the Capper-Volstead bill by putting back under the Sherman act the whole coöperative movement. This amendment must be eliminated if farmers are to benefit by the legislation and thereby regain their will to produce."

1920 Made New Record in New York Marriages

New York, Jan. 1.—[Special.]—If the year 1921 is going to establish any new records for Cupid, it had better get away to a good start.

Leap year may have had something to do with the fact that 1920 was a banner one for marriages in Manhattan.

According to figures given out there were 43,302 marriage licenses issued. This beats the former record by 2,500, made in 1917, when many sought "safety first" by rushing into wedlock.

From the municipal building also came the statistics that there were only 176 persons committed to the workhouse for intoxication during 1920. In 1916 there were 3,000 committed.

JUDGE WHO TOLD SANTA TO PASS UP KIDS IS OUSTED

West Orange, N. J., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Police Recorder John B. Landers, who sentenced three small boys recently not to receive any Christmas presents, lost his post today. Appointed three years ago, Landers, a Republican, was ousted this afternoon by an all-Republican town council and seemingly only because of the freak sentence.

When the three lads came before Recorder Landers three weeks ago, he put into practice his belief that young prisoners should not be put into penal institutions where they might pick up crime knowledge from older inmates. He directed the boys be sentenced to their own homes, get no Christmas presents, and be in their homes every night before 6 o'clock for a month.

The announcement of the sentence brought letters from as far away as the state of Washington, and few of the writers praised the edict—they saw only three lads without presents, and neglected the motive back of it all.

Recorder Landers himself had only this comment on the failure of the council to reappoint: "It's all politics."

Chile Says Her Bolivia Treaty Is No League Affair

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

SANTIAGO, Jan. 1.—The Chilean foreign ministry has just issued a statement that Chile cannot recognize the right of the league of nations assembly at any time to revise the treaty of 1904 between Chile and Bolivia. The statement was issued to deny reports that consideration of the Bolivian petition for revision has been included in the program of the next assembly. The foreign ministry had been informed the subject had been put up for consideration at the next assembly.

Strikers to Use Own "Money" at Relief Store

New York, Jan. 1.—A new brand of paper money will be put into circulation in New York shortly, it was announced today by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. Printed bills of one, two, and five dollars value will be issued to strikers, while "small change" in denominations of pennies, nickels, dimes, and quarters will be stamped out of cardboard.

U. S. WAR PAPER USED LESS AS BASIS OF TRADE

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—Holdings by federal reserve banks of paper secured by government war obligations declined from nearly $1,500,000,000 at the opening of 1920 to about $1,141,000,000 on Dec. 31, according to the annual review issued today by the federal reserve board.

This result was due, it was stated, largely to changes in credit policy started late in 1919. At that time "preferential rates," the report says, "on paper secured by Liberty bonds and Victory notes were abrogated by some reserve banks and raised by others to a level more nearly approximating the rate level for ordinary commercial paper."

Wanted to Diffuse Bonds.

The purpose was to stimulate the reserve banks, it is said, to place the war securities in the hands of "ultimate investors," and the report adds "the results are seen in the gradual decrease of the amounts of war paper held during the year by reserve banks."

The review then discusses the much mooted raise in rediscount rates, which was hailed by some as a means of drastic deflation. The board's view on the results is given as follows:

"The influence of the higher rates is seen in retarding the progress of borrowings rather than in restricting them. In fact, total federal reserve bank holdings of $2,719,100,000 discounted bills on Dec. 30 are $487,900,000 larger than at the beginning of the year."

Circulation of Notes.

Of federal reserve note circulation the report says:

"Federal reserve bank note circulation shows a practically steady decline from $259,000,000 on Jan. 2 to $177,000,000 on May 14, but since that date an increase to $217,000,000 on Dec. 30 is noted."

Of the gold reserve the report says:

"During the early part of the year the federal reserve banks lost gold, largely through export to South America, and to the orient, and on March 26 total gold holdings were $1,935,000,000, marking a reduction of $128,000,000 from Jan. 2. Since that time, partly as the result of gold shipments from England in anticipation of the maturity of the Anglo-French bonds on Oct. 15, there has been an increase in gold reserves, the total on Dec. 30 being $2,059,333,000.

$275 a Square Foot Paid for Lot in Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 1.—The highest price ever paid for real estate in Philadelphia was reported today in the sale of a three story building at Fifteenth and Chestnut streets, which brought $27,500 a front foot, or $275 a square foot. The lot, 20x100 feet, was bought by the Fidelity Trust company from the estate of the late P. T. Hallahan for $550,000.

HANDLING BOOZE UP TO WORKMEN, CHILEAN STATES

SANTIAGO, Chile, Dec. 31.—The recent decision of the maritime organizations of Arica to decline to unload wines and liquors has led to an exchange of communications between Jorge Matte, the foreign minister, and the governor of Arica. The governor asked instructions.

The foreign minister replied that the government would take steps to require the disembarkation of all commodities in transit to Bolivia, since the commercial treaties with that country must be respected.

With regard to the reported refusal of the workers to unload liquors destined for Chilean territory, the foreign minister is quoted as replying that it would be impossible to bring pressure to force this unloading, since the workers are absolutely free to execute such labors.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF GOODRICH

WITH the close of 1920 Goodrich completed fifty years of service. To have lived these fifty years is much. To have grown the full fifty years is more. For the true test of an institution is more than its age—it is how much it has written into the progress of the world, and how much benefit it has been to the industry it represents.

Fifty years ago when Goodrich was founded the uses of rubber were few. It was just beginning to be appreciated as a factor in industrial life. Since that time the ingenuity and inventiveness of man have created of this material many thousands of products which today are absolutely essential to the continued progress of the world.

The site of the little factory of fifty years ago is today part of the city that Goodrich built—the "city of rubber," comprising 63 great buildings of brick and steel, towering into the air, reaching into the ground—covering 110 acres of land. Throughout America and the world its influence is felt and its products are in wide demand.

Looking back through these fifty years, it is worth while to realize and appreciate that the Goodrich organization has always endeavored to meet its responsibilities and perform its tasks with a full sense of its obligations toward the public. From the day when Dr. Benjamin Franklin Goodrich opened his small factory in Akron, Ohio, in 1870, one ideal, one principle, has always dominated its efforts. It is the simple creed voiced by Dr. Goodrich when the company was founded: "Let us make goods destined for service."

Goodrich is what it is today because during these fifty years it has adhered to high ideals, and the years have woven a web of tradition which is not only sacred to the organization, but which also furnishes a powerful incentive to pass the heritage on from one generation to another.

AN INTERESTING BOOKLET—Few persons realize the interesting side—even the romance—of the rubber industry and its history. We have published a booklet commemorating our fiftieth anniversary. It tells the story of rubber. This book, "The Golden Year of Goodrich," will be sent in response to a request on your business stationery.

Each Dot Represents Fifty Subscribers to The Chicago Sunday Tribune

This pictures the peculiar conveyor which takes the folded Tribunes from the foot of the presses up through the ceiling to the mailing room on the floor above. From there they are swiftly distributed throughout Chicago and to more than seven thousand other towns and cities.

The Chicago Tribune Is a Force in Marketing

A NEW CONCEPTION of newspapers has arisen during recent years. In the past a newspaper was regarded as having two functions—1. Distribution of news; 2. Comment on news.

Today the newspaper is an essential cog in the machinery of distribution. It is an integral part of modern merchandising—even as is the railway. Editorial departments may be compared to the passenger service, while advertising corresponds to the freight.

Editorials may mould the opinions of the public; advertising creates and directs their buying habits. This development has focused the attention of business men upon the market which each newspaper sways rather than upon the votes it controls.

Newspapers as market factors are divided into two classes—a large group, each with limited and localized influence—and a very small group wielding power throughout extensive sections. Newspapers of the latter type are leaders of American journalism in every way. Supreme among these leaders is The Chicago Tribune.

Five Giant States Form The Chicago Tribune's Market

In area and wealth The Chicago Market is unique. No other metropolis has a tributary territory of magnitude and attractiveness equal to Illinois plus Indiana plus Iowa plus Michigan plus Wisconsin.

Sparse population in the Far West, a large proportion of illiterates in the South, and a number of great cities close together in the East have prevented the growth of any other market so vast yet so homogeneous as The Chicago Territory.

Not only is The Chicago Territory unique in size and wealth, but also in diversity of its resources. Nowhere else is there such a remarkable balance among agriculture, manufacturing, mining and commerce.

The Chicago Territory has one-sixth of the population of the United States, but it produces one-fifth of the crops, one-fifth of the manufactures, and one-seventh of the minerals.

Naturally, the purchasing power of this rich domain is tremendous, resulting in enormous retail and wholesale trade. The city of Chicago is in itself a tribute to the magnitude of this zone's commerce. During a human lifetime it has outstripped thousands of rivals in population and now ranks fourth among the great cities of the world. Chicago is the greatest railway center on earth. Location and wonderful transportation facilities have brought leadership in the wholesaling and jobbing of many lines of merchandise.

The Chicago Tribune Is the "W. G. N."

All the above factors have combined to make possible the development in Chicago of the world's greatest newspaper. The Chicago Tribune's 450,000 morning circulation is the largest in the United States, and its 800,000 Sunday circulation is exceeded only by one New York Sunday newspaper. Consider these figures in connection with the fact that all the morning dailies of Canada have a combined circulation of less than 500,000, and all the Sunday papers of Canada have a combined circulation of less than 275,000. In Iowa, a state 125 miles from Chicago at its nearest point, The Chicago Tribune has a larger circulation than any except a very few Iowa newspapers. In the entire five states of the Chicago Territory The Tribune reaches one family in five.

THERE has thus been created in The Chicago Tribune a mighty engine which can carry buying impulses throughout a vast, rich market, even as the rails carry freight. And these buying impulses will result in the rails carrying freight as surely as day follows night. Wise merchants and manufacturers are planning larger and more aggressive newspaper campaigns than ever before as the one best method of promoting confidence, stimulating business, and inaugurating a new era of prosperity—for they know that 1921 Will Reward Fighters.

The Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

BAD FACTORS FOR 1921 ALSO ITS BRIGHTEST HOPES

Same Conditions Yield Both Gloom and Joy.

The New York Times.

New York, Jan. 1.—[Special.]—The qualifying reservation which has accompanied all prediction for the financial and industrial New Year is easy to understand. To the minds even of expert observers the unsettled markets and complicated business situation, whose results were bound to extend at least some distance into 1921, have seemed to render certain at least an unfavorable beginning to the New Year.

In addition the apparent controlling influences were so novel, so confused, and, in their larger economic consequences, so obscure, that even the most hopeful forecasts hesitate to pin down prediction to time and circumstance.

Nevertheless it is possible to offset each discouraging argument with one of distinctly reassuring character, derived from precisely the same facts. It is the business, both of the economic prophet and of the practical man of affairs, to weigh against one another the two sets of considerations and strike the balance.

The Unfavorable Elements.

Grouped in this way, the half dozen conspicuously unfavorable elements in the immediate financial outlook may be thus defined:

1—The fall in prices in so far as it has involved and for a time will continue to involve severe business losses; curtailment of production, reaction in trade, reduction of dividends, and partial unemployment.

2—Disturbances to credit as a consequence of the reaction and the losses, with increase of business failures over those of recent years.

3—Condition of agricultural producers as a result especially of the long decline in prices of grain and cotton; a condition which is causing propaganda both for uneconomic government assistance and for deliberate reduction of next year's acreage and production.

4—Possible effects of the trade reaction; on the one hand upon volume of railway traffic and therefore upon earnings, on the other hand upon our export trade, especially with South America and the east, whose markets a year ago seemed to be the mainstay of our foreign commerce, but are now in the grip of severe economic readjustments of their own.

5—Unquestionably heavy impairment of the government's revenue in consequence of the great curtailment of incomes and business profits during 1920, from which under existing law the great bulk of the 1921 federal taxes will have to be raised.

6—Political confusion in Europe, especially in Germany, Italy, Ireland, and Greece, with what seems to most people to be disappointing progress in economic recuperation and continued increase of paper currency inflation.

Same Facts Yield Hope.

This is a formidable list; the facts on which it is based are known to everybody and there is little reason for surprise at the hesitation even of hopeful prophecy in the face of such visible economic obstacles. Sometimes the cheerful prophet answers by basing his prediction altogether on this country's immense natural resources, the imperative need for its products by the rest of the consuming world, and the fact that the American business community has in the past invariably emerged from periods of severe depression stronger and more aggressively successful than ever before.

All these are perfectly sound arguments, but it is more convincing in the present case to argue from particulars than from generalities. From the facts of every one of these groups of adverse influences, deductions of a wholly opposite character may be reasonably drawn, and they have this advantage; that whereas the unfavorable circumstances just enumerated are mainly matters of the past, the counter considerations are matters of the future.

The Favorable Elements.

The reassuring financial and industrial influences may be thus enmerated:

1. The fall in prices, insofar as it means reduction in the high cost of living, which to the average citizen had become intolerable a year ago; also in its effects on the credit situation, now returning to normal; also in its release of capital for financing legitimate home requirements and requirements of Europe; also in the sobering influence on labor radicalism of the discovery that employment and wages may, after all, be still dependent on efficiency.

2. The last year's demonstration of the power and readiness of the federal reserve not only to alleviate financial crisis, but, through applying the brakes against credit inflation, to avert the crisis itself.

3. The fact of the greatest harvest in our history and of one of the largest winter wheat crops on record sown this autumn, at a moment when the whole world needs it; this being one of the foremost traditional influences in sustaining American prosperity; the lower prices for the crops being accompanied or quickly to be followed by adequate instead of insufficient farm labor and by lower prices for farmers' materials.

4. The new and more hopeful outlook of the railways, not yet even approximately tested as to the profit earning power of the new rates under the government's altered railway policy; while in the export trade, the teaching of our whole economic history is that a fall in prices, however, sudden, invariably places American foreign trade on a sounder and surer basis.

5. The fact that reduction in the proceeds of income and profit taxes will force the hand of congress to reform the whole unfair and precarious present system of taxation.

6. The facts, as regards the European situation, that political disintegration of the bolshevist sort has made no headway beyond the Russian border; that devastated Belgium has already become a strong and active producing state; that reconstruction of devastated France has proceeded at a pace which few people seem to understand; that England and France have already checked or reversed the expansion of their paper currencies, and, finally, that the present year is almost certain to see the United States government personally coöperating in some definite form with the other nations already leagued for peace and reconstruction.

These, then, are the counterbalancing influences on even the immediate economic future.

When Is Only Question.

As to when and how soon the favorable considerations will counterbalance the unfavorable, or, in other words, how long the forces of reaction will supercede the positive though largely latent forces of recovery, that is a question no one can answer at this moment.

But the economic history even of 1921 will depend quite as much on the business community's intelligent recognition of the reassuring offsets as on the automatic play of economic forces.

SHOT DEAD AS YEAR IS BORN.

Toronto, Jan. 1.—Fred Bonniwell of this city, shot dead while the whistles and bells were acclaiming the advent of 1921, was listed today as Toronto's first homicide victim of the New Year. Bonniwell was shot by an unseen person, as he emerged from a house with other members of a party to welcome the New Year.

Illinois Central Reviews Transportation Conditions of 1920

The railways of the United States have just emerged from a year of unprecedented difficulties. With a transportation plant unequal to the demands placed upon it, they made a record of which railway men are justly proud, and in which forward-looking citizens generally may well feel a pride.

Commercial requirements were the greatest in history. Because of a strike at the coal mines in November and December, 1919, at the beginning of 1920 the country was 45,000,000 tons short of its normal supply of coal. Other commodities in great quantities also awaited shipment. A flood of traffic was turned upon the railways.

The railways had suffered from the war. New equipment had not been purchased in sufficient quantities. Old equipment had not been adequately maintained. Cars had been scattered broadcast over the country. The building of yards and sidings and new mileage had been interrupted. Adequate rates had not been assured. Wages, material costs and taxes had mounted to new levels. A switchmen's strike, tying up terminal freight movement, occurred in April and made its lingering effects felt throughout the early summer.

Facing the great demands for transportation, with many obstacles against them, the railways accomplished a task that seems almost miraculous. The danger of a coal famine was averted. Necessary traffic was moved. A steadily increasing record of efficiency was built up, week by week and month by month, exceeding all previous records of railway history. The peak of the car shortage was passed early in September. Late in November a car surplus actually existed. The supply of transportation now exceeds the demand for the first time in five years.

Many predict a business revival early in 1921, an optimism that seems altogether justified. If the predicted business revival materializes, it will make a heavy demand upon the railways. We believe the railways will be able to move a larger business than they moved during the record-breaking past year. New equipment will be in service, and old equipment will be in better condition. Railway workers are developing the old spirit of loyalty and efficiency, conceived upon a new foundation of public service. More adequate rates have been granted. The public is taking a more intelligent interest in railway affairs. Lessons in co-operation have been learned.

It is well, however, for those who will make heavy demands upon traffic during the year to anticipate those demands as early as possible, now that the railways are in a position to handle all traffic offered them. Material which can be transported now in anticipation of later demands should be transported, in order to distribute the traffic burden more evenly.

We of the Illinois Central System are proud to have shared in the 1920 record of the railways of the country. Our best efforts will now be put forth in helping to make the record of the railways for 1921 even more creditable than was the record of 1920.

Constructive criticism and suggestions are invited.

C. H. MARKHAM,
President, Illinois Central Railroad Company.

Why You Should Patronize the Independent

Telephone: Stewart 9146

Offering West Virginia Pocahontas Mine Run Coal, $10.00 Per Ton, Delivered at Your Building

YOU can place your orders with the Independent Coal Dealers without explaining from what dealer you bought your last season's coal.

The purpose of asking this question of a customer is to consult this particular coal dealer through the medium of the Association and to investigate the prices you paid for your last fuel, etc., and through this gentlemen's agreement to request you to place your order with your old coal dealer whether you desire to or not.

Each customer should and is requested by the Independent to have his coal reweighed at the nearest public scale to certify its correctness. This is allowed by the Independent Coal Dealers.

Each load of coal delivered by the Independent Dealer shows on the delivery ticket the car number of car in which the coal was taken from the original Bill of Lading or receipted freight bill will be furnished the customer on his request, to prove the quality of the delivery.

The Independent Coal Dealer sells his coal for cash on delivery—the reason for this is: that the prices are lower than Association members—he has no credit agency associated with him to distinguish the good pay from the slow pay.

Association Members can investigate the credit standing of any coal consumer by consulting through the Association, and any misunderstanding with an Association Dealer will enable this dealer to shut off your supply of fuel.

The object of the Association members is to control the supply and demand. Are you for or are you against these methods to meet fair and open competition? If so—patronize the Independent.

We are, Yours respectfully,

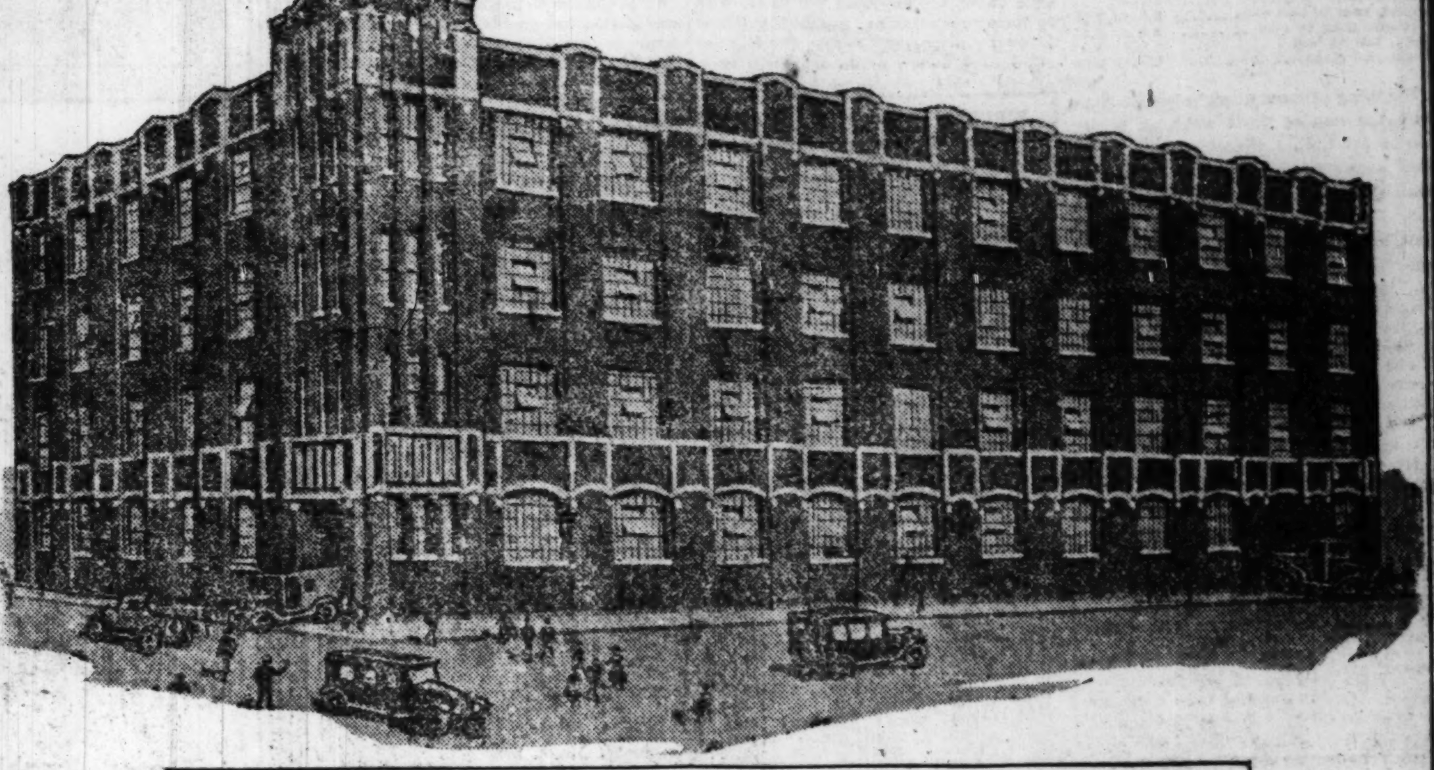
Quincy Station Building
First Mortgage 7% Gold Bonds
Secured by Building, Land and Equipment Located at Northeast Corner of Jefferson and Quincy Streets, Chicago, Leased as a
United States Government Postoffice
To Take Place of Present CANAL STATION



Income ASSURED Through Non-Cancelable Lease to Government
The building has been leased to the Government for twenty years at $125,000 per annum, or $2,500,000 for the term. The yearly income is almost two and one-half times the greatest annual interest charge and the term rental is sufficient to pay the entire bond issue almost three and one-half times. This lease is ironclad and non-cancelable. It will run uninterruptedly for twenty years. Thus the earnings are a certainty.

Chicago's Largest Postoffice Station The new Quincy Station, which will take the place of the world famous Canal Station now housed in the Union Depot, will be the largest postoffice station in Chicago. It will be four stories and basement in height, constructed of brick, stone and steel, and conforms fully to the specifications of the United States Postoffice Department.

Security is valued greatly in excess of bond issue and decreased so rapidly each year that at final maturity only $400,000 of the bonds are outstanding.

Unequaled Location The location is just across the river from the loop, one hundred feet from the new Union Station and three blocks from the Chicago & North Western Terminal, in the world's greatest transportation center. This is a section which, although crowded with huge mercantile and manufacturing buildings, will witness within the next decade development of vast proportions as part of the plans for the "City Beautiful" and the new Union Depot.

Denominations, $100, $500 and $1,000. Maturities, one and one-half to ten years. Mortgagors agree to pay normal federal income tax not exceeding 4% upon the interest of the Bonds.

In our opinion—and our long experience, intimate knowledge of investments and superior facilities enable us to speak with authority—this is the most attractive first mortgage investment ever offered. If you have money to invest, you cannot, in justice to yourself, overlook this opportunity. Come direct to our office, or if this is not possible, telephone or write.

Buying Risky Installment Shares.

Great numbers of people living in and near Chicago are buying shares or bonds on the installment plan this winter. If all these many thousands of small investments prove to be satisfactory millions of dollars will be added to the wealth owned by small investors of the city.

Unfortunately far too many are hazardous and it is practically certain that the percentage of losses will be high. Among a dozen hazardous investments it is fairly certain that the majority will bring loss, although nobody can say that any particular one is certain to fail.

In order to make the losses as few as possible it is suggested that every one who wants to invest on installments first inform himself as completely as possible about his proposed purchase, then do some real thinking, and finally follow his own conclusions. People who buy because a salesman persuades them or a neighbor has bought the same thing are on uncertain ground.

It ought to be fairly obvious that if a salesman can afford to spend much time and effort in inducing you to invest a few hundred dollars on installments the selling cost must be very high, and high selling cost is necessarily a heavy handicap on the stock or bond sold. It is possible to invest on installments so that all the money except a small commission will go into the investment. You are not persistently urged to buy such securities, however. You may have to look for them.

Can an enterprise financed at high cost compete successfully with one started at low cost? Evidently it cannot. If you want to help finance a new venture pick one that can stand the tests of competition.

Brief Answers.

E. E. B.—The Manistee and Northeastern railroad has outstanding 20,000 shares of $100 par, also $1,092,000 of first mortgage bonds. The bonds are in default and the company has been in a receiver's hands for two years.

T. F.—Wabash preferred A stock is a speculation not an investment. Its dividend is non-cumulative. Nobody can predict when payments will be resumed.

Starting the Job Right

Clients have a way of liking to know in advance what a job is going to cost them, so that the preparation of estimates is no small part of the engineer's work.

WHEAT SUPPLIES ARE ANALYZED BY A. L. RUSSELL

"The difference in view between the seaboard position on wheat and that of the interior has been most radical this season, and the interior has won out in price," says A. L. Russell of Russell's Commercial News of New York, in a review of the wheat situation from an eastern standpoint.

"Beginning with the huge business of last summer, when the British commission took so much wheat that it sustained the price of wheat for several months, the eastern cash grain trade daily has seen the immense volume of the purchases and the record export clearances, and has been continually impressed with the unusual demand and the belief that the extent of the latter would offset the financial developments and the tendency toward price readjustment.

"The effect of the British buying, which began in the early summer and lasted until the end of August, with the continental buying developing in volume during the late summer and continuing during the late fall, was shown in the tremendous exports. The British took so much wheat that the Atlantic and Gulf exports of wheat since July to the United Kingdom have amounted to 62,964,000 bu up to the midddle of December, and to the continent 12,813,000 bu.

Wheat Marketing.

"The influence of this buying on the farm price of wheat is shown in the average prices received by the farmer this year. In the tabulation following, the amount marketed is based on the department of agriculture report for three months, apportioned to each month according to known percentages of previous years, and for October and November the amounts estimated as marketed are based on United States Grain corporation reports for previous years. The average price for the month is the farm price for the first of the month and the beginning of the following month averaged. This tabulation shows that, notwithstanding all the claims to the contrary, the farmer received a slightly higher average price for his wheat for five months than for the corresponding five months a year ago. The table, with last three ciphers on the quantities omitted:

	Aver. price.	Amount sold.	Value.
1920.
July	$2.429	103,500	$251,400
August	2.254	120,000	272,300
September	2.165	97,200	210,000
October	2.016	80,000	161,300
November	1.662	46,000	76,500
Average	$2.176	447,000	$971,500
1919.
July	$2.196	149,036	$327,283
August	2.1145	188,818	399,255
September	2.0765	125,029	259,522
October	2.114	88,802	187,727
November	2.144	55,683	119,384
Average	$2.126	607,368	$1,291,458

Figures for last year are based on the actual returns of wheat moved from farms each month, as reported to the Grain corporation.

Exports 200,000,00 Bushels.

"The exports of United States wheat up to the end of December are expected to reach close to 200,000,000 bu. How much can be shipped in addition seems to be a much discussed question. Export houses believe at least 40,000,000 bu more of American wheat have been sold to go out and there seems to be no letup in the demand.

"The eastern view has been that the domestic demand for wheat and flour would be of normal character, and that the total disappearance during the year for seed, food and miscellaneous use would be up to the per capita average of the last year, or the years prior to the two years. This would mean about 640,000,000 bu of wheat to disappear in the domestic trade, leaving the difference between that and the crop plus what might be used from the old carry over to make up the export surplus, or approximately 225,000,000 bu on the basis of the revised crop estimate.

"The western view, as promulgated by a number of western houses and publications, has been that the domestic trade would not absorb at the best more than an average of the last four years, including the greatly reduced two war years. This would make a difference of about 50,000,000 bu in the export surplus and if correct would mean that the export surplus of the United States would be around 275,000,000 bu and that we still have 50,000,000 bu to sell, in addition to an offsetting amount corresponding to the imports of Canada.

"The figures, as far as they can be arrived at, for the flour distribution for five months tend to confirm this western view. The amount of flour ground by American mills, based on commercial reports, raised to 100 per cent, seems to be about 16,000,000 brls less than last year [illegible] been for the five and a half months from 8,000,000 to 16,000,000 for the corresponding period in any one of the last six years.

"This tremendous decrease in milling represented a decrease in wheat consumed by the mills up to mid-December of about 82,000,000 bu compared with last year, and is the difference between apparently a normal distribution and the distribution this year.

"In previous years there has always been a piling up of supplies of flour against traffic conditions in the winter, and mills have been able to finance and grind the wheat as it passed by them from the farmers. This year they have not done so, and if later developments show a normal distribution, the question of the wheat supply may be a serious one."

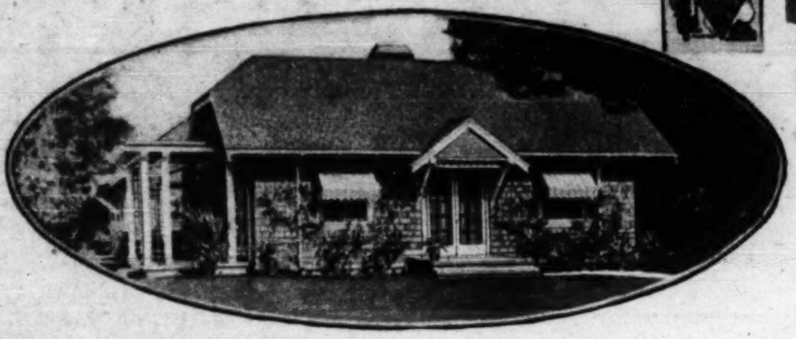
Read the Experience of Mr. Gustave Anderson

Mr. Gustave Anderson, of Lemont, Illinois, writes: "I am just finishing my new Aladdin Readi-cut Home. I have erected it on spare time only—some of my friends helping part of the time. We are very pleased with it and think more of it that I was able to build my own home, not being a carpenter myself. I found the blue prints very simple and did not have any trouble to speak of to find the place for the different pieces, and I was also very careful to follow the directions for piling the lumber, which was a great help. I found the material exceptionally good, and every piece went exactly where it was intended to go and fit perfectly when put in place. The finishing lumber was particularly fine. I figure I have my home now at about half of what it would otherwise cost me, and I will heartily recommend Aladdin system of Readi-cut homes to any one desiring to build an exceptionally attractive home at a very low figure."

We have thousands of letters from satisfied owners of Aladdin Readi-cut Homes who have had the same experience as Mr. Anderson. No matter where you live there is an Aladdin Readi-cut owner near you to whom we will gladly refer.



"Words can hardly express our admiration for our new Aladdin home. The man who erected it had no trouble at all as every piece fit perfectly just where it belonged," writes Mrs. W. E. Lewis, of Olmstead Falls, Ohio.

"I know I saved materially on my Aladdin home and if I intended to put up a house again I would not hesitate in ordering another Aladdin. Besides saving a few hundred dollars in cost of labor I also saved a lot on the cost of material," says M. A. O'Brien, of Cleveland, Ohio.

Mrs. Floyd E. Davis of Frankfort, Indiana, writes: "Our new Aladdin home cost us between $2000 and $3000 less than any local contractor figured."

"Should I build another house, it will no doubt be an Aladdin, as I am satisfied the material would have cost me several hundred dollars more had I purchased it from local dealers," writes D. L. Coble, of Mansfield, Ohio.

"Sawing lumber to fit is slow work, and as all we had to do was nail, we figured a lot of time was saved by buying an Aladdin Readi-cut Home. The lumber was O. K. and every piece was cut and fitted perfectly where it belonged," writes M. J. Russel, of Rockford, Illinois.

Powder Always Shows on a Rough Skin

DO you realize that your skin would look twice as nice if you used a finishing cream every time before you put on face powder?

Begin today and make your skin more beautiful by this easy formula:

A little CREME ELCAYA rubbed gently into the skin; then if you need color, a little Elcaya Rouge spread carefully over the cheeks before the Cream is quite dry; and after that, the film of Face Powder over all.

Your dealer has ELCAYA and has sold it for years. Ask him.

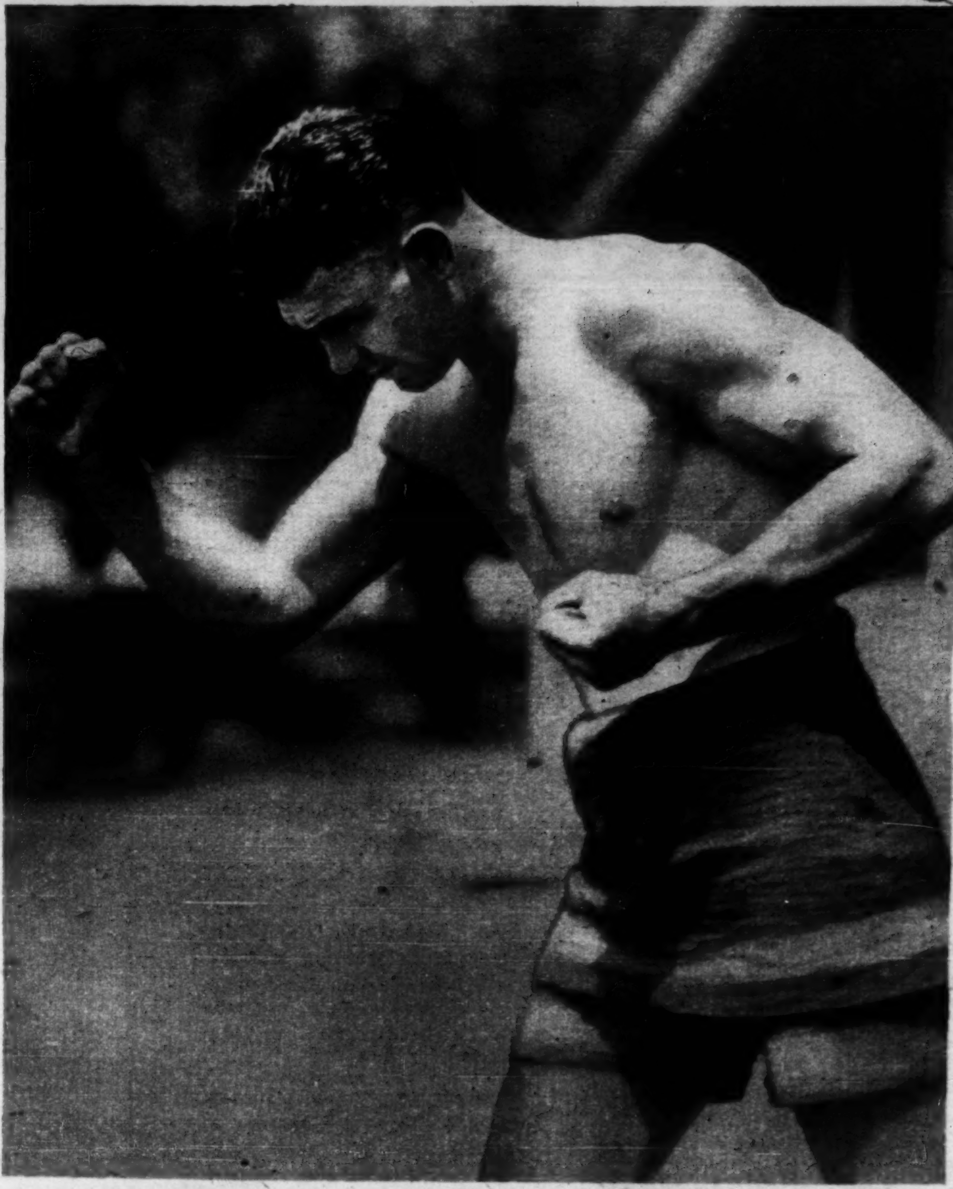
THE NEW KING—Wallace Reid should face toward the east and thank the gods for what the gods have given him in the way of personality, smile and good looks. All of these, combined with considerable stage sense, have made him what he is today.

Of course, you know all about the hero, but if by any chance you've lost his biography, here's a little data for you. Mr. Reid was born in St. Louis, Mo., and educated in New York and at the New Jersey Military Academy. When he was a young bird he occupied a position on the editorial staff of a motor magazine. He decided, however, that he was meant to act, not write, and entered vaudeville in a sketch written by his father, Hal Reid. His screen career started with Vitagraph. Then he went to Universal, where he both acted and directed. He was with Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation," and has been with Paramount in any number of pictures, chief of which perhaps were "Joan the Woman," "Carmen," and "Excuse My Dust." His last picture was "Always Audacious."

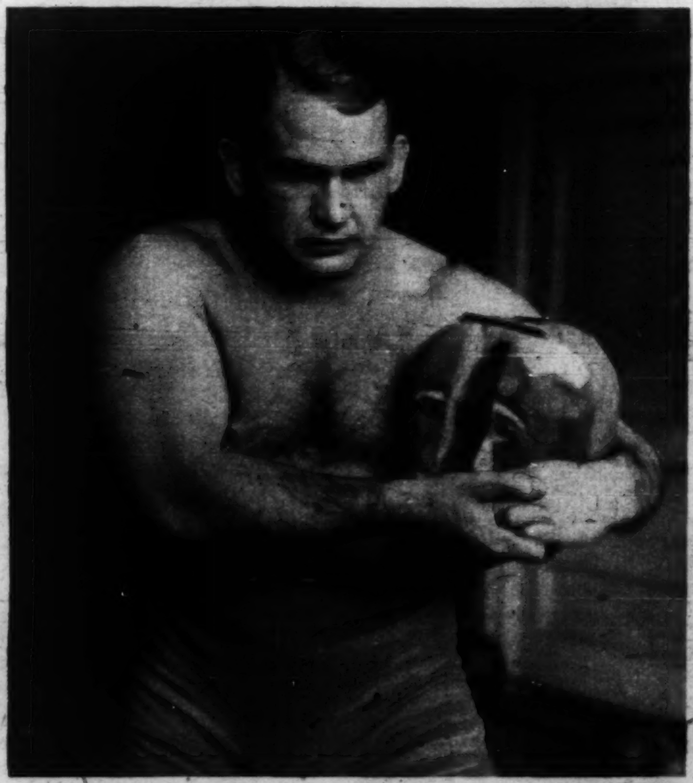
The gentleman in question is 6 feet 1 inch tall, weighs 170 pounds and has light brown hair and blue eyes. He is married to Dorothy Davenport and has an infant son who may put daddy with the has-beens some day.

Mae Tinee.



STILL UNBEATEN—Jack Dempsey met unexpectedly vigorous opposition in his New York bout with Bill Brennan on Dec. 14, but he remains the heavyweight champion of the pugilistic world. Brennan, the Chicago challenger, was knocked out in the twelfth round after putting up a stiff battle that surprised everyone.

(TRIBUNE photo.)



A NEW CHAMPION—"Strangler" Lewis, who won the world's heavyweight catch-as-catch-can wrestling title in New York on Dec. 13, throwing the former champion, Joe Stecher, with a head and hip lock. The photograph shows how Lewis practiced the deadly head lock on a head-shaped dummy equipped with powerful springs, which yield only under great pressure.

A WIZARD OF THE CHECKERBOARD—Newell W. Banks, national checker champion, won 86 and tied 14 games out of 100 played at one time recently at the Chicago Y. M. C. A. He is shown blindfolded, playing six simultaneous games. A match in Great Britain with the champion of England is the next item on his program.

War Discovery Does It Easily

Quick healing antiseptic, originally invented for wounds. Wonderful for skin eruptions or itching anywhere. Free trial proves it.

To really end dandruff, dissolve a few Kloria Tablets in water and simply wet the scalp thoroughly with it. The results from the first application will prove how easily this scalp disease can be ended by a few of these simple treatments. It stops the annoying itching instantly and is as harmless to the hair as water.

This is the same wonderful antiseptic agent discovered in the war, which healed wounds often in one-fourth the usual time, and conquered infection where all old-standard antiseptics had failed.

Kloria doesn't smart, is soothing, pleasant and absolutely safe, because not poisonous. Yet by scientific test it is over 40 times more germ-destroying than carbolic acid.

Never before was there an antiseptic so healing, so effective in destroying germs, and with so many uses in every home.

Compare Kloria with anything ever used for eczema, itching, skin eruptions, irritations. Note how quickly wounds, sores, boils, and burns heal. Test it for pyorrhea (sore, bleeding gums), and notice how promptly the soreness and bleeding disappear, usually in one week. Try it for mouthwash and gargle—see how quickly it relieves sore throat—how clean the mouth feels. Harmless, yet far more effective than poisonous antiseptics for personal hygiene.

Dissolve a few Kloria Tablets in water and instantly you have, at a cost of a few cents, a large bottle of liquid antiseptic which is clean, colorless, stainless and virtually odorless.

All druggists. 50c. Money refunded if not satisfied.

The New Way to use Face Powder.

NOW you can use a face powder that cannot spill. The powder is in cake form, covered with porous cloth. You can drop it on the floor and the compact will be just as perfect for use. You wipe the puff on the cloth covering of the compact and the powder comes through as needed. You could powder your nose in the dark and you would not get too much powder. This new, perfect way to use face powder was invented by the specialist who perfected the famous harmless La-may Powder. The package contains enough pure La-may Powder to last you for generous use for about two months. There are two qualities of packages. Both are very flat and convenient to carry. One box with compact and puff sells for fifty cents. The other, a dainty Vanity Box with hinged cover and two-inch mirror, containing compact and flat lamb's wool puff, sells for only one dollar and fifty cents. This beautiful box is of the same material of which vanity boxes are made that sell for at least three dollars. This attractive Vanity Box will not tarnish. It will last a lifetime. When this better box is empty you refill it by asking your dealer for a fifty-cent La-may compact. The compact and puff from the fifty-cent package is made to fit the La-may Vanity Box. Ask your face powder dealer to show you this splendid new idea. Remember, here, at last, is a compact that will not crumble and spill. And the powder comes out so evenly you could powder your face in the dark. La-may Face Powder is also sold in the loose form for thirty-five and sixty cents. La-may is guaranteed absolutely pure and harmless. Because it is pure and because it stays on so well it is now used by over a million American women. If your dealer refuses to get you a La-may Vanity Box, you may order by mail from Herbert Roystone, 16 East 18th St., New York. There is also a delightful La-may Talcum that sells in a beautiful large package for only thirty cents.

REVOLUTION in INDIA

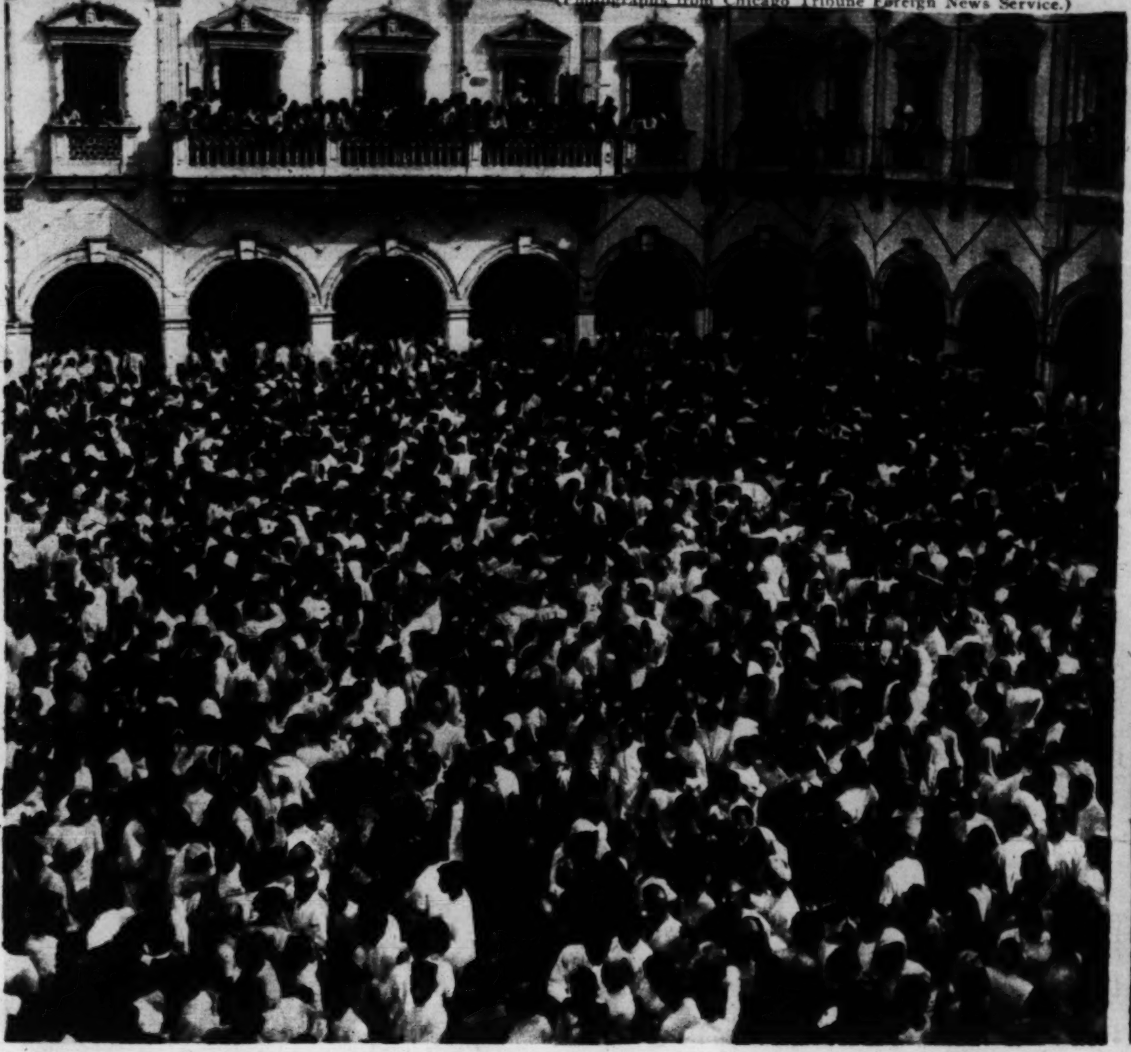
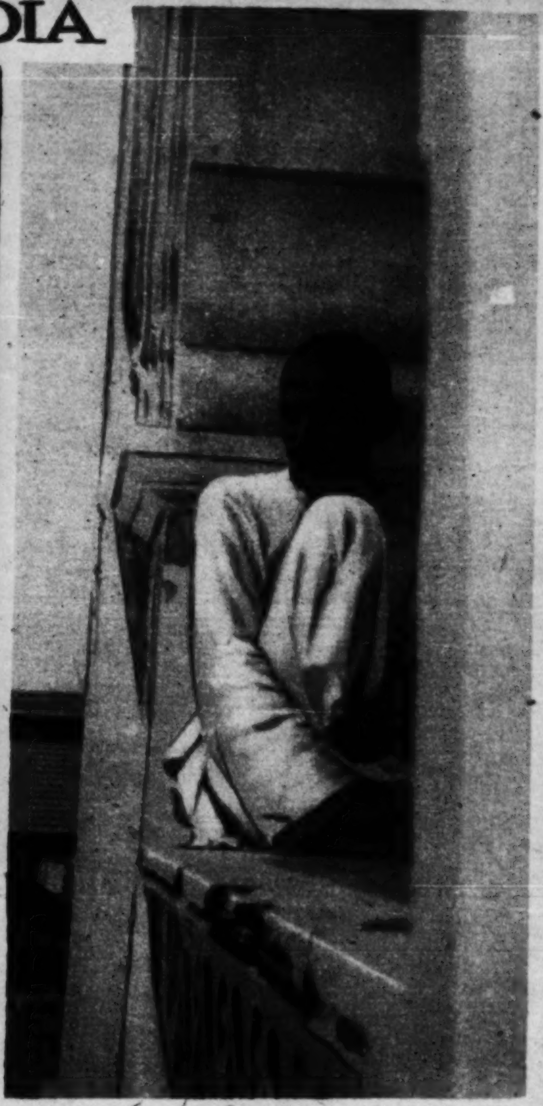
(Photographs from Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.)



AN INDIAN CROWD listening to Gandhi, the simple lawyer whose devotion to the cause of the revolution in India has won him the confidence of millions of followers. To the ordinary Indian he is known as "Saint" Gandhi. He is leader of the non-violent, non-co-operation movement against the government.



GANDHI looking down on a great crowd that is cheering for him—a characteristic picture of the man who is leading the Indian revolt.

FOOTBALL'S DEAD WARRIOR—George Gipp of Notre Dame, who died last month while gridiron critics, east and west, were acclaiming him unanimously as a member of the all-American team for 1920. DONNA BEATRICE MARCONI—A new portrait of the wife of Guglielmo Marconi with one of their daughters. Although the "wizard of the wireless" is Italian, there is a preponderance of Irish in his family. FAST FADELESS EASIEST TO USE

Beautify Your Hair with "DANDERINE"

35c a bottle! Freshen your scalp! Stop falling hair! Remove dandruff! Have lots of wavy, glossy, beautiful hair! You can!

IF YOU care for heavy hair, that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair; besides it eradicates every particle of dandruff; you cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp, the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast.

If your hair has been neglected and is thin, faded, dry, scraggly, or too oily, get a bottle of Knowlton's Danderine, apply a little as directed, and ten minutes after you will say this was the best investment you ever made.

We sincerely believe, regardless of everything else advertised, that if you desire soft, lustrous, beautiful hair and lots of it—no dandruff—no itching scalp and no more falling hair—you must use Knowlton's Danderine. If eventually, why not now?

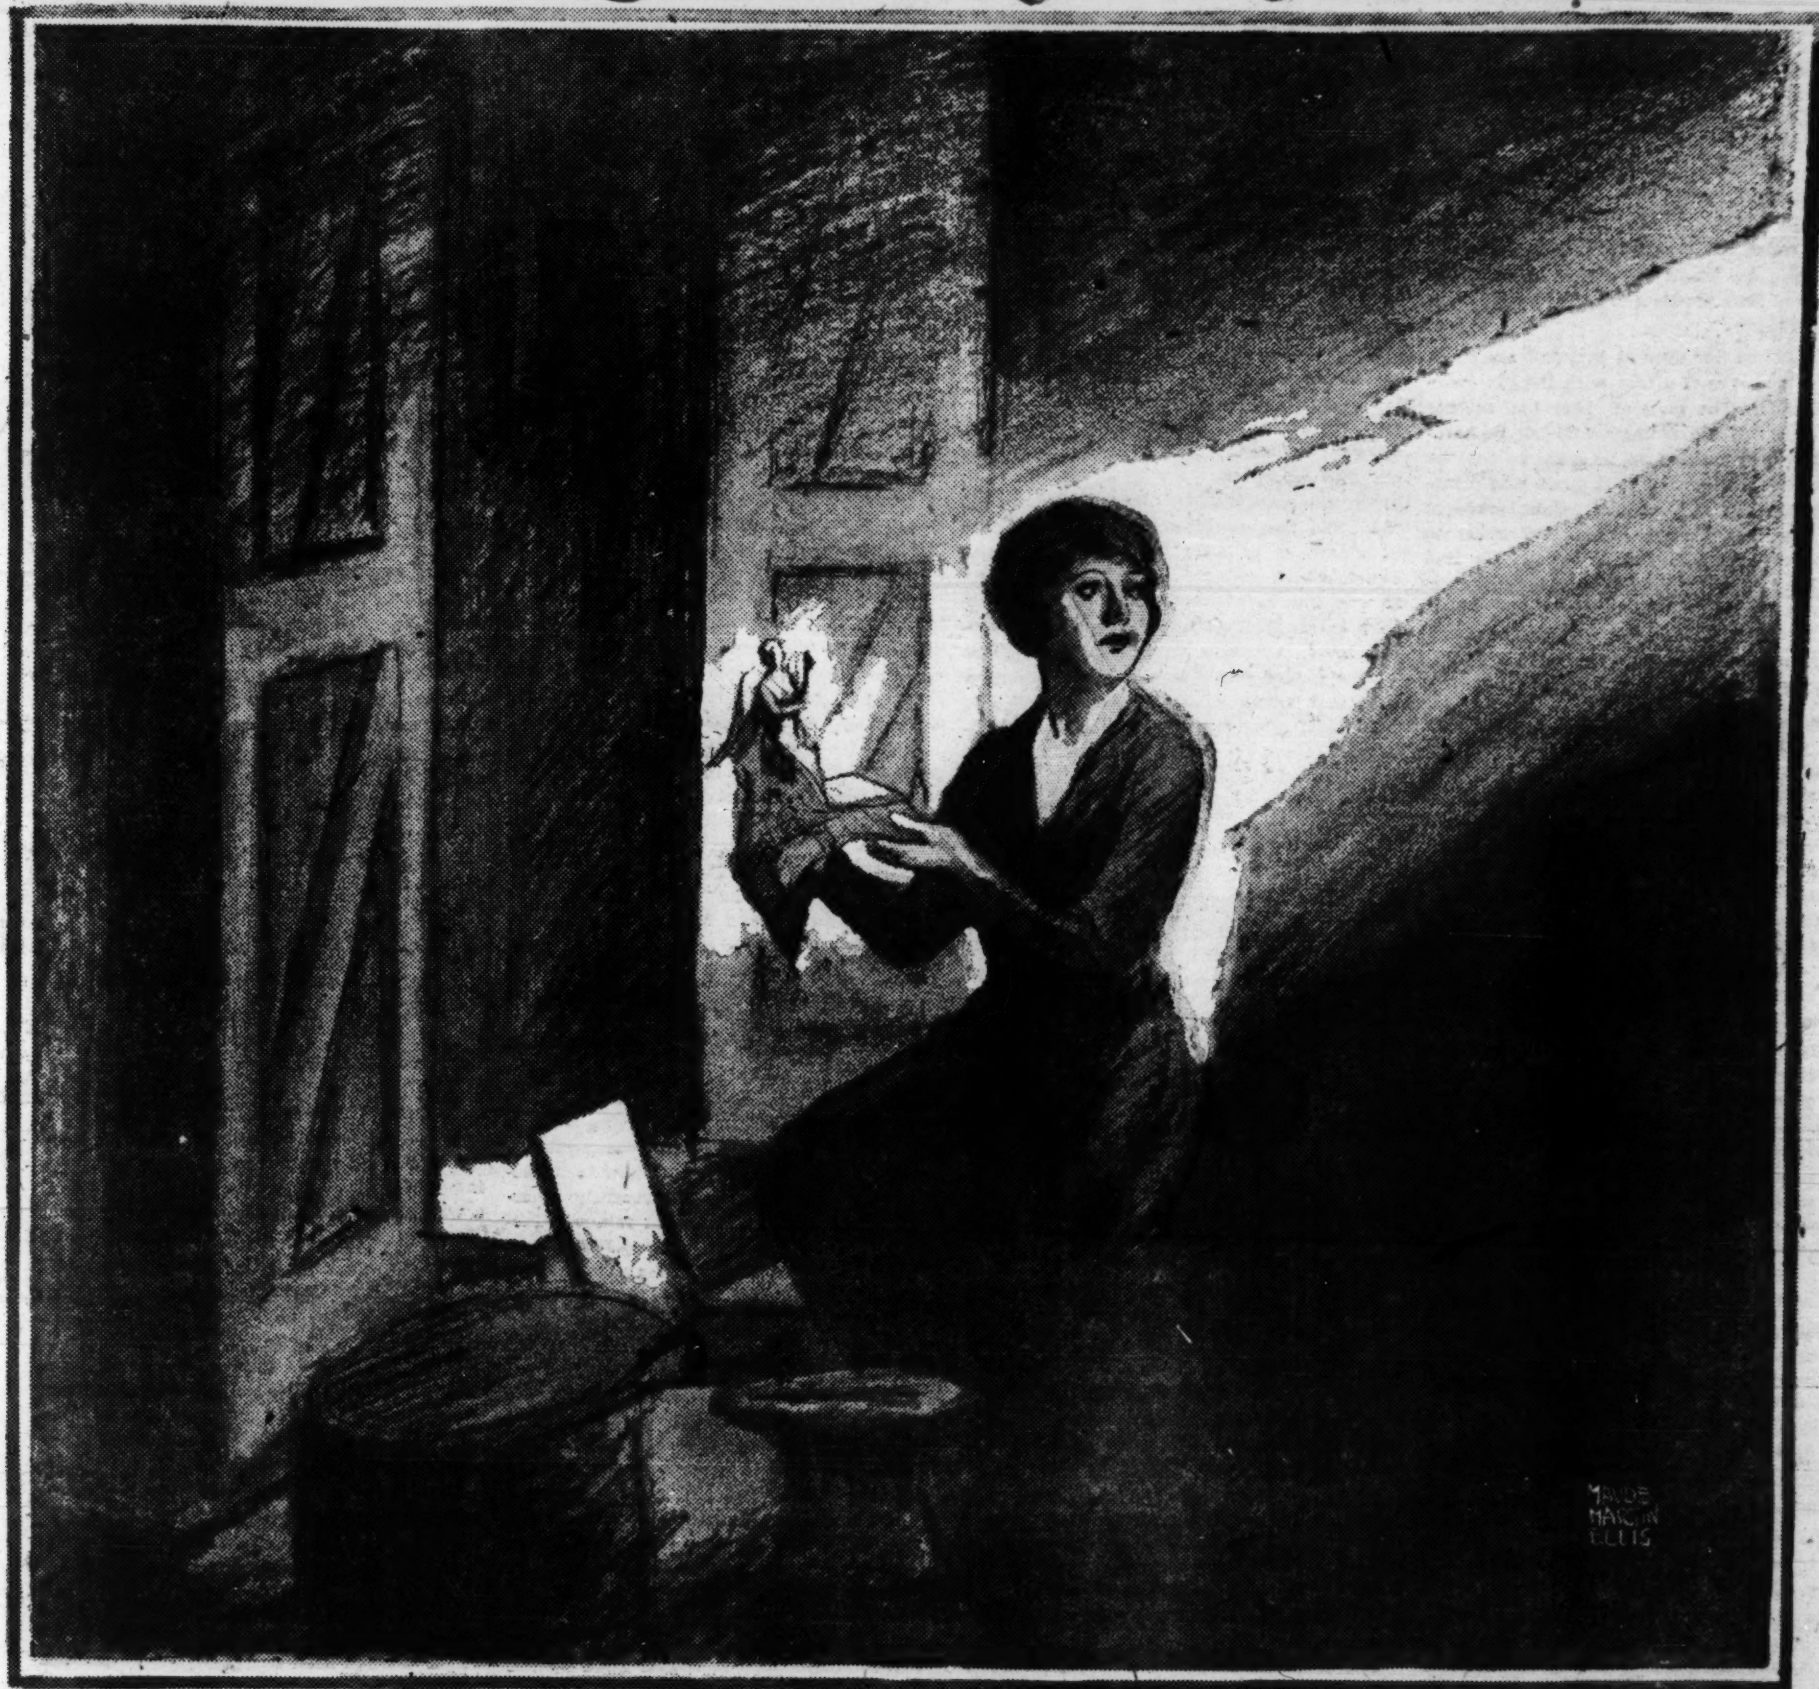
The Ivory Angel by Agnes and Egerton Castle



The object was wrapped in a faded bandana handkerchief. She unwound it to discover a statuette of the most exquisite workmanship.

The Strange Tale of a Fourteenth Century Image, an Alabaster Goddess, and a Villain

THE day after the sale Benjamin Bell proposed to old Vanderdeek's granddaughter in the queer little parlor behind the shop. The room of the small Queen Anne house, lost in a Chelsea bye-street, had once formed a fit setting for the extraordinary bric-a-brac which the antiquary had amassed from all ages and all parts of the world. He had collected with avidity and sold with infinite reluctance. His treasures had overflowed into every corner and nook from cellar to garret. The room at the back had been as crowded as the shop itself with things venerable and wonderful, lovely, fantastic, and grotesque—gems of forgotten art, or of value only because of the consecration of centuries.

Now the place was desolate, the shelves were bare, the walls ungarnished. An old leather armchair, a deal table, a broken fender, and a poker; nothing else remained in the room, once the crowded treasury of art with which Estella Vanderdeek had been familiar from her babyhood upwards.

Benjamin Bell, Vanderdeek's late manager and general factotum, had found her lying back in the old chair, her hands drooping ever its arms, her head bent forward, her long, slender limbs relaxed, her whole attitude expressing the utmost weariness of mind and body.

She had hardly lifted her heavy lids when he entered upon her. He had stood hesitating, looked around for a chair, and finding none, edged himself on the corner of the table, where he had sat, whistling softly to himself and feeling the ends of his black mustache.

A man with a certain oily good looks, of a Semitic type, and a certain oily assurance of manner that matched them, old Andreas Vanderdeek had had a high opinion of him, because of an unerring instinct which was as if it were a sixth sense with him. He was never taken in. He knew the real jewel from the fake at a first glance, the real antique from the subtlest imitation at a touch. Let him but get his fleshy tipped fingers about goblet or carving and he would diagnose its century, worth, and often its creator with unerring exactness.

For the last five years he had practically run old Vanderdeek's business; the antiquary himself had been bedridden. Everything that Bell had found he brought to his aged master's bedside, and the old man, even when his sight was failing, knew that he was clutching the unique.

"You will get thousands, thousands," he had said, chuckling, the very last morning of all to the sad Estella. "Bell will see to it for you. You will be rich, my girl."

And Estella hadn't cared then. The only creature who belonged to her on earth was going from her. She and her grandfather had been alone ever since she could remember, and she had loved the whimsical, secretive, queer old man with an affection at once filial and protective. She never knew what his life had been, or whence his stock. Once or twice he dropped her hints that the world would be very much surprised if they knew what blood ran in his veins. For the rest he was pleased to make a mystery; and, beyond the mere names of her father and mother and the fact of their early death, she was as ignorant as any foundling of her origin.

She, too, was silent and naturally secretive and her grief for her grandfather had been as dumb as it was deep. She had not cared when the dying man had told her that she would be rich. And she did not care when the night of the sale Benjamin Bell lamented that it had not gone according to his expectations. Now she lay the image of lassitude like one for whom the whole earth has nothing left of interest.

He contemplated her. He had always thought her like certain rare ivory statues, once tinted, in which but the shadows of color remained. The only color about this girl was in her hair, of a strange copper red, which grew in natural waves and was dressed close to her head after a fashion which heightened her resemblance to a lost classic beauty.

Mr. Benjamin Bell, with his instinct for the choice and precious, felt his pulses kindle as he looked at her. All his life he had handled curios for the mere money return. Now, he told himself, he would give himself a treat; he would keep something for himself, just for the artistic joy of it. So sure did he make of her

He cleared his throat.

"Miss Estella."

The long lashes, deep red like her hair, did not as much as quiver on the smooth pallor of her cheek.

"What is it?" The rich, soft, slow note of her voice robbed the words of their abruptness.

"We did uncommon bad business yesterday."

Still not a stir in the languorous loveliness, not the twitch of a finger, nor a quickened breath.

"Matter of fact," he said, suddenly, brutally, giving his black mustache an irritable screw, "there's hardly enough to pay the old boy's debts."

She opened her eyes at last and stared at him; amber eyes of a tone with the eyebrows and lashes. The gaze of them had always made him feel a little uncomfortable, he hardly knew why. Much as he admired her, he had often told himself that there was something uncanny in that look. Cats looked at you like that, though it was ridiculous to compare a splendid girl to a cat. He had seen such eyes in wild, beautiful striped creatures at the zoo. They made you feel a little cold in the spine because you did not know what thought lay behind them.

"Now what's she thinking of?"

She could not guess. No one could ever find out—Mr. Benjamin Bell was far too clever a fellow for that—the use he had made of old Vanderdeek's complete confidence in him. He had no remorse of conscience. Without the powerful motive which was now at the back of his thought, he would have considered himself a fool not to take advantage of another's foolishness. To a mind or his caliber that was business. But as it was—he dropped his glance from her suddenly and answered the question in it as if she had spoken.

"Your grandfather seems to have made a pretty mess of things, and—well, you see, at a sale like this there's a lot of playing into each other's hands. You come up against a sort of ring. No use mincing matters. I don't believe there'll be a hundred pounds out of it for yourself. O, I say, Estella." He slid off the table. "Don't be upset. I'm here, you know.'

He came up to her and took her hand into his stubby, cigaret stained fingers. A moment she let it lie in his grasp inertly, while, still gazing upwards, the pupils of her eyes expanded till they seemed suddenly dark as night in her colorless face.

"I'm here, you know," he repeated, swaggeringly. His full lips parted with the smile of the conqueror.

"What do you mean?"

She would slowly have withdrawn from his touch had not his clasp tightened.

"I mean I'll stand by you. I mean I'm awfully in love with you. I am, 'pon honor. I've loved you for years, I really have. If you'll have me, I'll be a jolly good husband. Look here, Estella, I've been doing a bit of business on my own and I ain't done so badly, neither. I'll keep you like a lady. You need never come near a counter or look at a shop again. I'll set you up in some topping little house in Wimbledon and give you your own car. And, by George, we'll be as happy as love birds!"

Estella Vanderdeek gathered herself together and stood up. Her movement of withdrawal was now so relentless that even this confident wooer fell back before it. He could as soon have held a falling wave as this girl.

"I don't think I can have understood you."

"Why——" he grew purple and blustered to cover his discomfiture. "O, come! You understand well enough. You ain't such a little greenhorn as all that. I know it's a bit of a staggerer, but, don't fret. If you marry me you won't regret it." He paused, swallowed, and added with an effort, "I'll settle something on you, too. Aye——" a sense of his own magnanimity emboldened him. He extended an arm.

Estella Vanderdeek retreated as far as the confines of the room would allow her and with her back against the wall, bent forward and regarded her grandfather's trusted clerk as if he had suddenly appeared before her in the guise of some strange and noxious animal.

"Me—to marry you? O, you know—I never could do that."

Her tone expressed a surprised impatience that was more galling than the utmost repudiation. Benjamin Bell drove his hands into his pockets and faced her with an ugly look in those prominent eyes which a moment before had been fatuously amorous.

"What do you intend to do then?" he said. "Beg or starve?"

"Why should I? Why did the things fetch so little?"

He shrugged his shoulders and spread out his hands. For the life of him he could not help shifting uneasily under her glance. It was those yellow eyes of hers which upset him. If he had only known the thought that lay behind them! Suspicion, accusation, he could have met and defied. It would take some cunning to outwit Benjamin Bell. But this confounded inscrutability!

Suddenly she relinquished him.

"I'd rather beg or starve," she said very quietly, and turning walked out of the room.

The man looked after her, his common comeliness distorted with fury.

"Wait, my lady!" he exclaimed, shaking his open hand at the closed door. "Wait, my ivory statuette; I'll break you yet."

Estella went up the narrow paneled stairs to the room which had been her grandfather's. If the parlor had been desolate, what of this? The empty bed, covered with an old dust sheet, the discolored patch on the wall where the Van Eyck triptich had hung, the two kitchen chairs upon which the coffin had rested; scraps of paper, bits of straw, a yellowing tube rose, sickly sweet, which had fallen from the wreath: it was the very waste of what had once been home! The old antiquary had hoarded his most precious treasures here. The Venice chairs, the lemon wood bureau, the gold and crimson lacquer cabinet on the Charles II. gilt stand; the crystal cups, the Bohemian goblets, the onyx, lapis lazuli that had crowded the chimney piece—all, all had been swept away! Nothing but dust remained. The door of the cupboard in the wall which had held her grandfather's few garments was ajar; even those humble relics had not been respected; some old clothes man, she supposed, had laid his clutch upon them. That hurt her dreadfully. Had they left her nothing? She had a sudden craving to hold something that had belonged to her dead, if it were only one of the woolen gloves with which he had clothed his dead gouty hands. She went swiftly over to the cupboard and flung it wide.

Bare but for a broken bandbox in the corner, out of which protruded the brim of a most dilapidated top hat. Even an itinerant Jew had no use for this. A grotesque souvenir, truly, but better than nothing! Estella stepped into the cupboard and knelt down by the broken bandbox.

As she lifted it into her arms she noticed that the board upon which it stood was loose, and upon an impulse which she ever afterwards thought was a direct inspiration from the spirit of the departed, she put the bandbox away and slipped her nails into the crack.. About two feet of the board moved easily upward upon a hinge and revealed a secret place beneath.

A moment she knelt, her heart beating fast against her ribs; then she sprang to her feet, ran quickly to the door of the chamber, bolted it, and put her handkerchief over the keyhole. Returning, she plunged her shaking hand into the cache.

She drew forth a parcel carefully wrapped up and carried her treasure trove back into the light. Unerringly the conviction flashed upon her; here the old secretive mysterious man who had been her grandfather had hidden the supreme find of his antiquarian life! He had been moved by some kind of strange jealousy to hide his discovery from even a covetous glance. Little had he guessed that he was thereby saving his granddaughter from beggary.

They had been robbed, he and she—she was assured of this in her innermost soul—by an unscrupulous man. Bell had had a baser purpose still than that of his own enrichment in plotting the destitution of his master's grandchild, but he had been frustrated.

The object she held in her hand was wrapped in a faded bandana handkerchief. She unwound it to discover a statuette of the most exquisite workmanship—an angel holding a tabor. It was carved in ivory, set on a crystal base, worked and inlaid with almost unbelievable delicacy with gold and silver and pearls. The whole thing was not more than twelve inches high, but her training and her instinct alike told her that it was a priceless bit of medieval church art, and had probably been part of some reliquary, perhaps a shrine for a splinter of the true cross, or a thorn from the crown, for which supersacred treasure the devotion of the time had deemed nothing too beautiful or rare.

She gazed thoughtfully at the lovely little face of the angel, at the slender hands which held the musical instrument, even the nails were perfect. No Japanese could have turned out more minute and patient work than this unknown little master of the days of faith.

Estella Vanderdeek had a smile on her pale lips as she packed her gift from the grave into the battered hat, and, putting the lid on the band box, carried it to her own room, where she locked it all up in a trunk. The key of the trunk she hung round her neck inside her blouse, by a black ribbon.

She saw Benjamin Bell again that night at supper, but now she could meet him with a calm front.

"You will have £30 left when everything is paid," he said to her in a businesslike tone, which was meant, she knew, to cut her to the marrow.

"What will you do, Miss Vanderdeek? The rent of this house is over £100 a year."

"I will not remain here," she said, in her slow, musical voice. She sat looking down at her plate.

"And what are your plans, if I may ask?"

"My plans are my own," she answered.

It was hot August weather. The window of the parlor was open to the little green strip of garden behind, and the Madonna lilies which Estella had planted as a child and which throve there year after year, reared proud white heads over the window ledge, and sent gushes of incense fragrance in upon them. The great roar of London came subdued but ceaseless to their ears.

Benjamin Bell smiled in his turn; a dreadful smile.

"Fling one of those lilies out there under the hoofs and motor cars and it will have as much chance as she will, beautiful and destitute," he thought, "cast upon this London!"

Aloud he said to her: "I give you three weeks, my alabaster goddess!"

He drew a glazed card from his pocket and pushed it across the table toward her.

She glanced at the card and then lifted her white lids to fix him with one of those looks which so profoundly troubled him.

"Descloches & Co., 76A New Bond Street. Objets d'arts, Antiques," she read.

"That's me. You'll find me there."

Yes, she would find him there, and how much else besides! She knew that she had been dexterously robbed, and that she had no redress, but, pressing the key against her breast with a secret touch, she could still afford to smile.

II.

Mr. Oliver Macmichael was giving a lunch party. His guests were three distinguished connoisseurs. He was himself new to the select community, having but recently inherited from an uncle the world famous Macmichael collection. The late John Macmichael had sought all over the world for church treasure. His choice had been intensely selective, but not even the little known room at the Louvre could have shown more exquisite specimens of a lost and inspired art. Everything was of rather small dimensions; reliquaries, chalices, monstrances, pyxes, incense boats, but no stone or metal had been too rare to be pressed into the service of the altar. Crystal cups, amethyst or lapis lazuli caskets, glowing enamels, ivory carvings as fine as lace work, silver wrought like foam of the sea; pearl studded, ruby blazing, diamond rayed, here were offerings deemed by a burning faith worthy to be set before the Most High!

Oliver Macmichael had been awed by the sense of his own ignorance before his superb inheritance. But the spell had soon fallen upon him, the blood of the collector ran in his veins. He would learn to discriminate what he already loved. He might add—he would surely add—to this array of delicate wonders, but part from the least of them, never! He was only 25, and the war had left him, demobilized, stranded, and unemployed in an unsettled world; but he had found his vocation. He was a prisoner in an exquisite palace; a slave to the most imperious mistress that ever ruled a lover; the lost beauty of the world.

Sir James Fenwick, curator of the Huntingdon house museum; old Lord Oxshott, who possessed the finest collection of intaglio rings in Europe, and that smart young expert, Julius Vane, who ran private picture deals and intelligently valued other people's possessions, decided knotty points, and was, in fine, a sort of superlative art agent, and made a very good business out of it, as his charming house on Campden Hill, with its Italian court, testified—these were the guests whom Oliver Macmichael had convened round his old mahogany that day in late September, and from whose lips he hoped to gather those words of wisdom which would illuminate his rich way.

"I've had the most extraordinary bit of luck," he said presently. "I have found an admirable secretary, who is making a new catalogue for me. And, 'pon honor, she knows——"

"She?" interrupted Julius Vane, who was a smooth faced man with a smooth manner, a sweet smile, and fine, intelligent eyes. He had a soft, rather caressing voice, and an easy habit of the world. Duchesses loved him, and he had shown too many pleasant royalties over exhibitions not to be quite sure of himself in whatever society he might be. Nevertheless, humbly as Oliver Macmichael admired his superior knowledge, he invariably jarred on that youth.

"She?" Vane interrupted, with his smooth laugh. Oliver colored hotly.

"Yes—a she and, as a matter of fact, remarkably good looking," he blurted out. "But she's—O, well! quite a lady! A most wonderful girl. She's found out a lot of mistakes in my old uncle's catalogue already. She knows." Oliver wagged his head. "She was born to it, I may say. She was old Vanderdeek's granddaughter."

The three men exclaimed at the name.

"Old Vanderdeek!"

"Strange old chap that was."

"He was an honest fellow," Sir James Fenwick pronounced. "Never sold you a fake so long as he was up and about the place, but when he got ill there was a kind of a Jew chap of whom I wouldn't say as much."

"O, that's my friend, Benjamin Bell," said Julius, smiling agreeably. "The cleverest scoundrel in Europe. I'd rather have his opinion—his real opinion—on a doubtful point than even Oxshott's here."

Lord Oxshott, bearded, bluff, grizzled, nodded a little contemptuously at the compliment.

"Well, I'll take Miss Estella Vanderdeek's opinion," cried the guileless Oliver. "A look's enough for her, 'pon honor it is."

He was all on pins and needles, youthful as he was, to have done with the meal and introduce his guests to the real business of the afternoon.

Coffee was swallowed, cigars and cigarets were lit, and the three gentlemen were led by their host into that especially built skylit gallery at the back of the Eaton place house, which enshrined the Macmichael collection.

Sir James, a small, grizzled, highly cultured individual, removed the cigar from his lips with an involuntary gesture of reverence on the threshold, as if he had been about to enter sacred precincts; Julius repeated the same gesture with a flourish when he perceived the tall woman's figure in deep mourning which rose unobtrusively from behind a writing table littered with papers.

"O, Miss Vanderdeek!" exclaimed her employer in his bright boyish way. "Here they are. Lord Oxshott, Sir James Fenwick, and Mr. Vane."

"We've met, haven't we," said this last, searching the girl's face with his brilliant eyes. "Your grandfather and I were regular cronies, and, well, I haven't forgotten seeing you once or twice."

His air implied appreciation of her beauty. She stood there before him, perfectly composed. Her singular pallor intensified by the severity of her mourning, her deep hued hair catching on its ordered ripples the light which poured from the glass cupola above. In the long white hands she held delicately by the finger tips the fountain pen with which she had been writing.

"You really are, you know," cried Oliver impulsively, "so awfully like that ivory statuette. You remember, Lord Oxshott, my uncle always thought it the gem of his collection? The fourteenth century ivory angel. At least he called it fourteenth century."

"I wanted to ask you about that," said Estella. Her deep, lazy voice fell upon all their ears with a sort of agreeable shock. Even Oliver, who was accustomed to it, heard it always with a fresh surprise of enchantment. It was musical, it was honey sweet, languorous, dreamy; a blackbird's note on a summer evening, or an organ melody hung in the mystery of a darkened church; sounds that gave you a delicious shiver and yet soothed and drew you from the fret of life.

"I wanted to speak to you about the statuette," said Estella Vanderdeek. "I don't think it's German. I think it's French or Spanish. And I don't believe it was a processional figure. I believe it was part of some reliquary or shrine."

"Come, let's look at it again," said Julius in the patronizing tone of the self-confident.

They followed her, as, drawing a bunch of keys from her pocket, she walked, with the graceful deliberation which seemed part of her personality, towards the glass case at the other end of the room.

"Keeps the keys, does she?" whispered

A CHANGE of PROGRAM by Oney Fred Sweet

Madame Tretino Finally Sings Her Solo with Sufficient Feeling

THE word "chautauqua" may mean but an odd jumble of letters to the resident of the big city. But during the past ten years the smaller cities and towns throughout the country have come to think of it as an institution that comes with the summer.

The chautauqua tent is a big khaki canvas affair that is pitched in the tall grass on the edge of town. It stays up for a week and the program changes daily. Bryan has talked there; Alice Neilson has sung there; Reno has performed his tricks of magic; Weber has played there with his big band. One night a lecture, next night a band concert, the following night an operatic production.

The tents are so pitched in a series of towns and the circuit so arranged that the "talent" is obliged to make what the old trouper used to call "one night stands." Madame Tretino, booked out of Pittsburgh, was making a jump, between concerts, and was seated amid the red plush of a late train with her manager, Joe Klinki.

It was noontime of a hot day that stood for "great corn weather." Most of the passengers were napping, their heads thrown back, their mouths open. Traveling men had removed their coats, displaying their silk shirts, and their collars were unbuttoned in front, and their ties disarranged. Even the political discussions were being carried on in languid sort of fashion. The conductor, alpaca coated, passed down the aisle to collect the fare of the woman with the baby who had gotten on at Garden City, stuck a slip of pasteboard in the shutter window opposite her, and returned to his seat near the oranges and magazines of the indifferent train butcher. Traffic continued but it did so listlessly. The corn was being made.

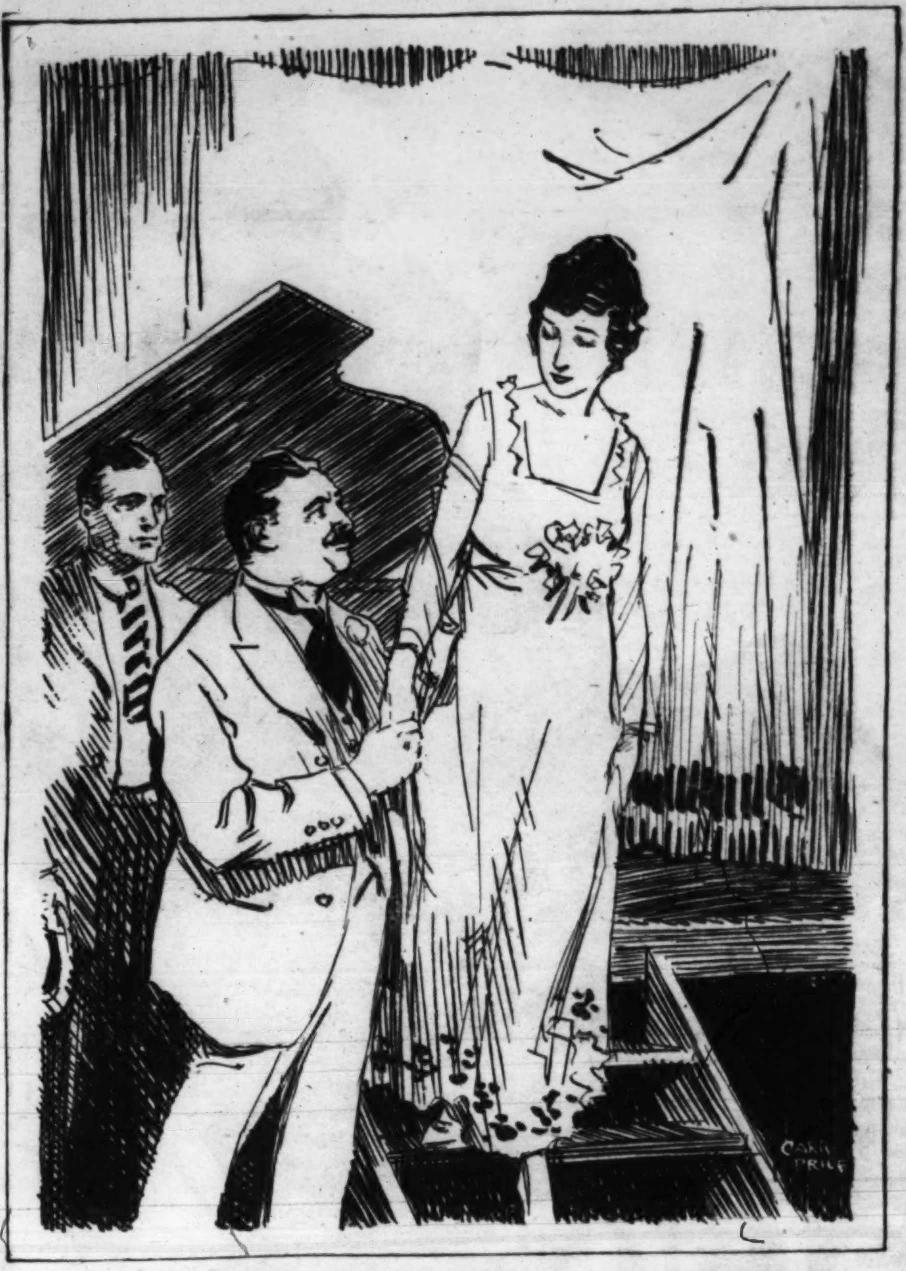
Joe Klinki seemed to be the only alert human on the whole train. He had nervously doped out the time table for the day, when he turned sharply to the prima donna beside him.

"No, I'll tell you, Cora, you'll have to put more pep into that 'Oh, That I Could Be With You Always' solo. I was in the back of the tent there at that town—what was the name of it?—last night. There's a great chance for you on that love song, but you don't quite put it over."

The prima donna, startled out of the beginning of a siesta, gave a jerk of her shoulders at being brought suddenly back to her surroundings of the train and the waving cornfields.

"Every morning you kick on that song, Joe. You know how much sleep I got last night—making that early connection at Cedar Falls."

"It's for your own good I kick, Cora. You who could be the greatest singer in America if you would only feel—right here at your heart—feel. Your notes they come out all right, but they just come out of your mouth, not from the heart. And I am thinking of the seasons ahead when I could manage you if you would only do as I say. Three weeks since we started now, and that big solo always the same—just words. Like this you should sing—'O, That I Could Be With You Always.' You see! Like you meant it."



"I knew you could do it. You sang just like I told you—from the heart."

"I'm tired, Joe. No sleep the last two nights with those train jumps."

"You sing that song right this afternoon, understand. The train is slowing down. What was the name of that town we're to get off at? Look at the name on the depot, Cora. Yeah, that's it. Ah, my prima donna! I'll get you your room if they're not all gone—on the shady side of the hotel maybe. Yeah, this is the town. There's the Premier Four. They're ready to get on the train. They was here yesterday."

The depot platform was all but deserted. There was a ride of four blocks down a quiet, tree lined street to the hotel opposite the courthouse square. The hotel was European plan. The proprietor said he couldn't get help any more, but that there was a Greek restaurant next to the postoffice.

On the way up from the depot, the prima donna had noticed the chautauqua pennants flung on a wire across the street and the posters of the various attractions of the week posted against the telephone poles. There had been a poster of herself in the evening gown she had worn three seasons before when she had sung in Pittsburgh.

By the time Cora Tretino reached the tent the crowd had already begun to gather. Autos were parked along the street. Off to the south it looked like rain, but above the clouds in the blue sky were harmlessly white. There was a soft breeze blowing from the clover fields. The grounds were shaded by giant maples.

Joe Klinki walked with Cora to the back of the tent, and cautioned the crew boys that they must not pound any stakes while the madame was singing.

"I'm listening close this afternoon," he said to the singer. "Remember, you give that solo as if you meant it. New contracts—big contracts—that is what I am thinking about."

Cora Tretino had been the attraction that had drawn the countryside together, but not the entire attraction. There was a buzz of conversation in the tent—retired farmers talking politics, mothers keeping their children in tow, fellows taking their "girls" some place for the first time.

But all was quiet when Madame Tretino sang. And when she sang "Oh, That I Could Be With You Always," Joe Klinki hurried to the back of the tent to congratulate the madame as she came off the platform.

"I knew you could do it," he enthused. "You sang just like I told you—from here, the heart. It was fine. Next winter you will sing that on the records."

"Yeah."

"And they are coming back to tell you how well they liked it. See! I will get their names and introduce. You see the difference it makes when you sing that number right? What is the name, mister?"

"The name doesn't make so much difference, brother," remarked the man in line. "Just wanted to shake the lady's hand. Always said 'Silver Threads Among the Gold' was my favorite, but I've got a new one now. I was jes wondering if she wouldn't like to take an automobile ride between now and the evening concert."

One of the big cars parked out in the street belonged to him, and he helped the madame in. They whizzed through Main street and were soon out where the corn waved.

"Corn looks all right, but we need rain," he told her, after they had ridden some time in silence. "That's my place over to the left where you see the big red barn. Ain't much of a house, but she could be fixed over. S'pose you get kinda tired jumpin' to a new place every day. How long you been singin'?"

"Ten seasons. But Joe said this was the first time I ever put over that 'Oh, That I Could Be with You Always' number."

"Well, you put it over. Guess you remember lookin' right at me when you was singin' it."

"Did you like it?"

"Well, I ain't much on fancy singin', lady, but I liked the sentiment. This here Joe—he don't mean anything to you, does he?"

"My manager, that's all. He's all wrapped up in my professional career since my husband died."

"There's 300 acres in this place, in all," he pointed out. "Just refused $300 an acre. Thought some of sellin' out, but I thought that—say, you meant that song this afternoon, didn't ya?"

He was looking at her sidewise.

It was some time before she spoke. She asked him what time the train left after the concert that night.

"Goin' west? Two o'clock in the morning."

"Another hard jump," she sighed.

He had slowed the car down and they were in the shadows of the maple windbreak. She saw the peonies blooming in the yard, the garden back of the house with its green onions. She did like green onions when they were pulled fresh out of the garden, and she did so hate the shriveled kind at lunch counters.

"Another hard jump, lady and you look tired."

. . . .

They wondered at the hotel what was the matter with Joe Klinki as he yelled "what, what, what!" in answering the telephone. He left the phone limp.

"That was a fine solo the lady sang this afternoon," remarked a traveling man, glancing up from the writing desk where he was making out his report. "What was the name of it—'O That I Could Be With You Always?' She sang it as if she meant it."

"Yeah," blazed Joe, "and like a darned fool that's what I've been trying to get her to do for ten seasons."

THE IVORY ANGEL

held in Angel's right hand. Best bit in my collection."

"Look at the angel again."

Oliver looked, yet without understanding. Then Estella, with a smile that transfigured her strange beauty to something. Oliver thought, beyond the earthly, repeated the words:

"'The musical instrument which the angel holds in its right hand!' In which hand does this angel hold the clarion?"

"Dear heaven!" cried Oliver. "In the left!"

Then he remembered the postscript to her letter, "The ivory statuette is not unique."

"There were two! There were two—a pair!" he cried.

"Ah!" said Estella. "You know now, but you believed in me without that. And that is why I love you."

When Mr. Julius Vane hurried into the gallery he found Mr. Macmichael and his secretary bending together over the case which had held the angel. The smooth Julius was unusually perturbed, not to say agitated; and, at sight of Estella, in close conclave with her employer, could not conceal a sharp movement of displeasure.

"My dear fellow!" he exclaimed, "I have just heard of the horrible business. Of course I quite understand you don't want to make a fuss. You have come across a very generous nature, Miss Vanderdeek."

"Don't say a word more, Mr. Vane," said Oliver, "till you hear my news. Miss Vanderdeek has consented to marry me."

Julius fell back a step with a sneer which gave his handsome face for one moment, Estella thought, a horrible likeness to that of Benjamin Bell.

"Yes," pursued Macmichael, steadily. "And you found us in the very thrill of a most interesting discovery. I have been very cleverly robbed. A whole pane of glass had been cut away from this cupboard and replaced by a new one. And the stauette you see there on the writing table never was mine. It belonged to Miss Vanderdeek. You may well look amazed. I was myself taken in when Benjamin Bell brought it back to me, but in his zeal for honesty he omitted to notice that the attitude of the angel is reversed."

Julius Vane took a stride to the table and bent over the statuette. When he looked up again his countenance had resumed its smooth mask.

"It seems uncommonly as if Master Benjamin Bell were a bit of a rogue," he exclaimed, with the most agreeable lightness. "Clever chap, but a scoundrel! I always said so, didn't I?"

"If you happen to see him," said Oliver grimly, "you can tell him for me that I have no intention of compounding a felony!"

Julius Vane laughed and disclaimed. Then he seized Oliver by both hands and effusively congratulated him; glanced at Estella, and bowed low with a deferential admiration, which wiped away from her guileness lover's mind the unpleasing impression of his entrance upon the scene.

It was only tactful to hurry away and leave the betrothed to themselves. But Julius Vane seemed to have important business of his own. He rushed to the nearest telephone and rang up the private number of Descloches & Co. The result of his communication was the instant disappearance and ultimate flight of Benjamin Bell abroad, admirably disguised as an agent in chemistry, Oliver Macmichael's ivory statuette lying lost in a huge bottle of crystals.

Estella's angel was never put back into the Macmichael collection. Wherever she went she took it with her, and in her own room at Eaton place there was a delicate shrine for it, with a lamp beneath, placed so that her eyes should fall on it if she woke in the night. It seemed to her the symbol of the dear angel guarding the sacred happiness of her married life.

(Copyright: 1921: The Tribune Company.)

Julius Vane behind his hand to Oliver, who feigned not to hear, in agony lest the question should have reached the ears of his pearl of secretaries.

Estella drew forth the little work of art, which was so singularly almost the replica of the one still in her trunk, the ivory angel hidden in the top hat and locked away in the room over the flower shop which was now her dwelling place.

She had kept her own counsel and she would keep it still on the score of that discovery; scarcely so much from set purpose as from some inherited tendency to silence and mystery.

"Good Lord," said Sir James under his breath, "I had forgotten how exquisite it is."

Lord Oxshott put on his glasses, and Julius Vane flung up both hands with the gesture which escaped him in moments of enthusiasm.

Estella held the treasure, and looked herself indeed, as both Benjamin Bell and Oliver Macmichael had noticed, as if made of ivory and gold. Her attitude, too, reminded one oddly of the figurine she just supported with taper finger tips.

"It was my uncle's last find," said the present owner. "I see by his diary that he ran it to earth just before the war in a back street of Prague."

Julius Vane put out his hands for it. Estella relinquished it to him, and with the air of one retiring to fit obscurity went back to her writing table and absorbed herself again in the interrupted work.

She dind't seem to be listening to the animated discussion which arose on the very subject of her own suggestions, and when presently Oliver, pale and stammering with excitement and pleasure, conducted the company round his treasures she paid no more attention to them than if they had been flies buzzing in the sunshine of the gallery.

After a while the party broke up. Lord Oxshott and Sir James bowed to Estella from the threshold as they went out, but her white lids were cast down; the courtesy was lost upon her. Julius, after lingering a moment, bland to affectionateness in his congratulations to his host, walked up to the table and held out his hand. She could not avoid the laying of hers in his grasp.

"Good-by, Miss Vanderdeek; I agree with you. Certainly not German. If ever you want to dispose of that statuette, Macmichael, I know some one who would run to £5,000—yes, yes—£5,000 or more! More," he went on, warming, "since it's unique."

Estella lifted her strange, inscrutable gaze upon him and folded her lips a trifle closer. She did not utter a word, and in a minute or two she was alone.

Presently Oliver came back, friendly, boyish, guileless. Even she, veiled about with reserves as she was, could not but unwrap in such company.

"I say, isn't this jolly?"

A faint smile flickered like a reflection upon water over her gravity.

"What do you find so charming?"

"O, everything! All this loveliness and the good fellows who come to see it and the fun of making the catalogue, and—and—and having you to make it! I say, Miss Vanderdeek, that's the best of all!"

She looked past him, dreaming with eyes fixed as if upon some illimitably distant thought, and then said:

"Did Mr. Vane mean that the ivory statuette would not be worth £5,000 if it were not unique?"

The question surprised him. She had to repeat it before he answered:

"No. I rather think he meant that he knew some one who would give me £5,000 for it on its intrinsic worth; that on the score of its being a unique specimen one might get more. I say, I don't mean to sell it, you know."

"No," agreed Estella, in her deep, melodic voice.

"And it is unique, it is unique, anyhow!" cried he, and though he laughed, the jealousy of the collector was audible in his accents.

"I wonder," said Miss Vanderdeek.

III.

"I am sorry not to be able to finish the catalogue," wrote Estella Vanderdeek a week after the lunch party. "I feel I must rest, and I am going to the country. Thank you for all your kindness."

The letter shook in Oliver Macmichael's hand. It was the most unexpected blow. He looked around the sunny gallery and its marvels became suddenly dust and ashes to him. He understood in one of those flashes by which the spirit reveals man to himself that all his intellectual ardors sprang from one pure human fire. He was in love with Estella Vanderdeek. It was her ivory beauty, her strange grace, her classic burnished head that possessed his every thought, not these relics, these little dumb perfections, these cold shreds and fragments. It was her soul that had animated everything; without her everything was dead.

He turned over the letter hastily, looking for some hint of regret, or some hope of meeting, and found overleaf a postscript: "The ivory statuette is not unique. I think I ought to tell you this."

Sweet natured as Oliver Macmichael was, his first impulse was to fling away the note. These last words seemed as if they had sprung from a gratuitous desire to wound him who had never entertained a thought that was not gentle toward her. But the little scent of verbena which hovered about it—she had a room over a flower shop and often wore a sprig—brought her presence vividly upon him, and he thrust the sheet into his breast pocket. It was all he had of her.

His next impulse, a natural one, was to walk over to the case which held the statuette in question.

It was not there.

His heart went off like a rocket when he saw that the other objects were so disposed as to hide the gap. It had been taken, then, deliberately. He rushed to the drawer of the writing table where every night he locked up the keys after she had restored them to him, and with a sort of frenzy went from case to case and shrine to shrine, all through the gallery, hunting for what he knew all the while he would never find.

Then he flung himself into a chair, and, tapping his forehead with numb fingers of misery, sought to put order into his recollections.

This was Monday morning. On Saturday at 1 o'clock she had left him as usual. Saturday night he had been to the theater. He had dined early. He had had no visitors. Stay, though—yes! Benjamin Bell had called from Descloches & Co. to offer him a crystal and silver cup bought at the Miniver sale. He had told him to bring it back Monday morning. They had talked together in his study five minutes, no more. And of course every one knew Benjamin Bell. Pshaw! He was not dreaming of suspecting the fellow!

Sunday he had had Oxshott and Julius Vane to lunch and they had strolled in the gallery afterwards. Was it possible that they would not have seen if the statuette had been missing? And yet, if he had not gone purposely to look for it, neither would he just now. He had dined alone, enjoying himself very much studying Estella's catalogue, making little pencil notes, which, if they did not show any great acumen, afforded material for those ever more prolonged discussions, which had been the past month's delight.

As he sat cogitating at express speed, the servant announced, "Mr. Bell, sir, by appointment."

And the astute Benjamin stood before him, bowing. He held a black bag in his left hand; with the other he was twisting the ends of his conquering mustache.

Oliver Macmichael turned upon him, flurried.

"I'm awfully sorry, but I've got an appointment. I really can't look at the cup today. Perhaps you had better take it somewhere else."

The art dealer put down his burden and glanced over his shoulder to see that the butler had retired; then, without a word—Oliver saw with wonder the trembling agitation of his movements—he opened the bag and drew out an object wrapped in a faded red bandanna.

"Pray, Mr. Macmichael," said he, in a horrid whisper, swiftly untwisting the folds of the handkerchief, "do you realize this?"

The next moment he was holding up before Oliver's starting eyeballs the ivory statuette.

"Gracious heavens!" exclaimed the young man, clutching the arms of his chair, "where did you get that?"

Benjamin Bell put the ivory angel carefully on the table, picked up the handkerchief, which had fallen to his feet, and spread one corner of it before his patron. It was marked "A. Vanderdeek, 4. 1903."

A moment Oliver stared with suspended pulses. He had turned deathly pale; the next minute the blood rushed to his temples in a purple flush.

"On Friday night," said Benjamin, still in his triumphant, husky undertone, "a woman brought this statue to one of our subsidiary shops and sold it over the counter for £2,000. She had the effrontery," went on Mr. Bell, with a sudden harsh uplifting of the voice, "she had the effrontery to remark that she had heard Mr. Julius Vane say that she could get 5,000 for it any day. You employed Miss Vanderdeek as your secretary, I believe?" The dealer was searching Oliver's face with his round, eager eyes.

"Old Vanderdeek cut up uncommon badly. The girl had nothing. Young, beautiful, penniless—a sudden temptation!" He made a circular sweep of his hand round the art treasures. "It was too much for her! Nowadays principles are worn thin, Mr. Macmichael. And you put every trust in her? Quite so, quite so."

Macmichael sprang up; seizing the bandanna, he thrust it into his breast pocket; then turned furiously on his companion.

"That will do, Mr. Bell. I will send you a check for £2,000. That closes the matter as far as you are concerned."

He strode to the chimney piece and rang two or three times.

Benjamin was so astounded that for the moment he in his turn could only stare, rage and a dawning insolent comprehension writing themselves on his countenance.

"Show Mr. Bell out," thundered Oliver, as his servant appeared.

"You'll prosecute, sir?" The Jew's voice rang like a threat. "You'll prosecute?"

"What business is that of yours?'

"It's every honest man's business, Mr. Macmichael."

"What do you mean by that?"

"There is such a thing as compounding a felony, Mr. Macmichael."

"Pshaw!" cried Oliver.

He flung up his head. His blue eyes lightened.

"How do you know I didn't give it to her? The door, Johnson."

Young, beautiful, penniless! My god, the unhappy child!

They liked Estella Vanderdeck at the florist's in Ebury street, and when any one came to see her, which was very seldom, she was freely given the use of the room at the back of the shop.

She was sitting on the corner of her narrow bed, dreamily stitching at the white muslin blouse which she would wear tomorrow in the country, when she was summoned to a visitor.

"We've shown him into the back room, Miss Vanderdeek, and Missis hopes you don't mind if the lilies are rather strong, the shop being so hot with the sun on it."

Putting down her work, Estella rose without a word. A tinge, the merest shadow of a blush, spread over the alabaster paleness of her cheeks.

Oliver Macmichael must just have had her letter. Rich and important as he was, poor and obscure as she must ever remain, she nevertheless thought she could guess the identity of her visitor. But it was the hated countenance of Benjamin Bell, his odious smile, his grasping hand, which greeted her as she stepped over the threshold.

"You!"

To show flurry, to speak in haste, was not in her nature; the slow dropped word carried all the more surely the weight of her antagonism.

"I," said Benjamin Bell. "Yes, I."

He went to the door, opened it to make sure there were no listeners, shut it again, came back and spoke, bending close to her and ever closer as she retreated.

"Estella, miserable girl, what have you done? All is known. All is discovered. The theft of the ivory statuette from that grass-green young fool has been traced to you. All is known, I say, Estella. Poor creature! It was a sudden temptation. I know, I understand. And you counted—O, Estella! Estella!—you counted on your employer's infatuation; it was madness. He is—he is furious, not to be held. I have just come from him. One only can save you—I!"

He stood away from her to glare upon her, and though his words were words of power there was a ferocity of doubt in his eye.

"I will be your friend. I loved you once. I love you still. God of my fathers! I knew the day would come when you would have to turn to Benjamin Bell! Did I not tell you that one day you would turn to me? Estella, put your two hands in mine. I do not care what you have stolen. I do not care how you have sinned. I love you. I will save my bride."

She had listened with a marble composure, drawn from his touch to the limits of the room. The great sheaves of lilies in their buckets on the window seat were not more white and gold and motionless than she. Into her eyes only, widening and darkening, did life concentrate, and for once the inscrutable gaze spoke—scorn. The perspiration was beading on his forehead as he waited for her reply.

"What! You think I took Mr. Macmichael's ivory statuette?"

There was a little undercurrent of laughter in the contempt of her accents. He flung out his arms.

"Don't be a fool, Estella!" he roared. "Unhappy child, you never thought of looking at the markings on your grandfather's handkerchief. You are self-condemned! I tell you I have just come from Macmichael's gallery."

"You have come from his gallery and you say the statuette is stolen?"

"Estella, what is the use of this? Pshaw! If you hadn't been so clumsy! Why, my sweetheart, the statuette is known to belong to the Macmichael collection by every art dealer in Europe. It's back in his hands already, I tell you, and I tell you he's on your tracks. You've a chance. Just one chance. I can hush it up. I'll do it, if you make it worth my while."

"If you touch me, Mr. Benjamin Bell," said Estella, "I'll call for help. Stand out of my way. Take your hand from the door. Do not dare to stop me. I have nothing to say to you."

She moved, she spoke, she looked with an ever more dominating force. The scent of the lilies was maddeningly sweet. His brain whirled. He had it in him to have struck her. He had a moment's vision of himself with his hands about that ivory throat from which had come the deep music of her supreme disdain. The very violence of his passion made him helpless. Suffocating, he saw her pass.

Estella went swiftly up into her little bedroom, and having watched Benjamin Bell, with the face of a devil, jump into a taxi and drive away, she put on her hat and very deliberately directed her steps to Eaton place.

Oliver Macmichael's servant received the secretary as a matter of course and ushered her into the small anteroom where she was wont to divest herself of her outdoor garments.

"You're a bit late this morning, Miss. Mr. Macmichael is in the gallery," he remarked, with his good soldier smile. He had been batman to Oliver Macmichael in the great war and they were still comrades.

Estella hesitated, then followed the pointing of fate. She took off her hat and gloves and entered unannounced into the presence of her late employer.

He was sitting in her place before the writing table, his face buried in his hands. Before him stood the ivory angel where Benjamin had left it, the little figure of purity and pity!

In Oliver's brain words were ringing as with the toll of a great bell. "Young, beautiful, penniless. Young, beautiful, penniless." And each time the bell tolled a wave of compassionate love went through him. A sudden temptation! Who was he to judge her?

Her step on the carpet made no sound. The movement of her thin black dress did not as much as whisper. Yet he felt her presence and looked up. She was so poignantly the center of his thoughts that he felt no surprise; nor did he pause to question why she should present herself barehead, as if that letter of resignation had not been written.

She stood still, half way across the room. Then, very quickly, he came towards her. His charming, irregular boyish face was suffused with changing colors. His voice shook, but he spoke with a dignity no one had yet known in him.

"Miss Vanderdeek, I'm most awfully sorry that you're going to give up your work for me. I must ask you to accept a little gift in memory of our pleasant hours. I have got out the little angel, you see. Will you take it——" he broke off. His gaze had plunged into hers.

To Benjamin Bell her eyes had always been baffling, but Oliver Macmichael read into her very soul. He saw how innocent it was, how honest, how pure, how untouched with the world's wickedness.

With a great cry he fell at her feet.

"You never did it! O, you never did it!" he was embracing her knees. He bowed his forehead to her shoe tip. "If an angel from heaven came to tell me you had done it, I would not believe it."

"O, you are good," said Estella, and the next moment they were clasped and their tears mingled.

Presently she put him from her, and, taking his hand, said: "Come, I want to show you something."

She brought him to the table and took up the angel.

"Now look," she said, "look closely. Do you notice nothing?"

He glanced from her to the statuette and back again, in silence.

"Open your uncle's catalogue," she bade him. Her voice, grave and rich as an organ note, was full of such a wonderful joy that she had no fear of obeying.

"Read up what is written there about the ivory angel."

occurred only at intervals. This one was half a mile or so long, a low, gently curving, sandy shore with promontories of the rock battlement thrust out at either end. A little rocky island faced it like a star set midway between the two horns of a crescent moon. The sea was quite still, long waves rolling lazily in and breaking in foamy babble as they reached the shallow water near shore. Danforth and Peggy walked across the broad, slightly sloping sand to the water's edge—oddly contrasting figures, her light grace beside his swarthy bulk. They waded in a little way until the surge from a broken wave washed their knees, the cold water stinging their warm flesh.

She stopped, crouching a little, cuddling herself together, and looked up at him with comical dismay, crying, "O don't you hate it at first! Just at this point I always wonder why I was such a fool! Shall we swim over to the island?"

Danforth measured the distance and replied hardily, "Yes."

But she suggested, "Perhaps you'd rather not. We can take a turn and back."

It was a kindly suggestion, he knew; he knew also that it referred to that swell in the front of his bathing suit; he was not in condition.

He smiled and replied, "O, the island."

"Let's run, then!" she exclaimed, holding out her hand; and that was sheer youthful zest. He caught her hand and they ran forward, through the recurrently deepening icy surges, until a long, smoothly molded wave advanced upon them. "Now!" she cried, letting go his hand, and as the wave rolled near she dove into it, her feet twinkling for an instant against the watery wall. He squatted, let the wave roll over him, and rejoined her on the other side. Striking out toward the island, the blood racing through her veins from the icy bath, she shouted to him ecstatically:

"Isn't it perfect! This is glorious! O, why didn't we go in before!"

Her slim body slipping through the water, propelled by skillful strokes, she laughed in pure joy of existence, turning a shining face toward him. Presently she dove, then rolled on her back, spread her arms, and lay still, her chin uptilted, her eyes closed, dissolved in the happiness of living. Danforth, too, enjoyed the swimming and enjoyed her delight in it; but he plowed along steadily, without any antics, because for a man out of condition it was quite a pull to the island.

There was a bit of sand around its base. She reached it first and flung herself down on her back, relaxed, letting the grateful heat of sand and sun penetrate her chilled body, her breast rising with long, full inhalations. Danforth climbed up beside her and lay down on his face—the swell of his paunch being more noticeable than ever when he lay on his back, and he was further out of wind than he cared to let her know. For many minutes they lay almost still, while the sun warmed them. Then she curled on her side and began talking, casually at first.

The vigorous young animal, which she partly was, had reacted to the delightful bodily sensation of immersion in cold salt water and the exercise of swimming. She had seemed as exclusively occupied with delight as a lark seems to be when it soars and sings. But all the while that mournful brooding and puzzlement had been locked up in the back of her head.

"Dan, do you know why Ted went away?" she asked abruptly, and in the abrupt question he caught a plaintive cry.

"Why, no; I didn't know he'd gone until mamma said so at dinner last night," he replied.

She who had seemed all delight some twenty minutes before now as sensibly seemed all sorrowful.

"I'm miserable, Dan," she said—like repeating the little cry in a yet more plaintive note. "I don't know what to make of things."

"What things, Peg?" he asked soberly.

Her head lay on her outstretched arm as she curled on the sand—awfully near to him. She crooked her arm, raising her head to her hand, and for a moment made meaningless marks in the sand with her finger.

"Will you tell me exactly the truth, Dan?" she pleaded, her eyes looking into his at that short range. "I sometimes think they're trying to fool me about something. You mustn't try to fool me. You're the dearest friend I have in the world."

He waited a moment to be sure of controlling his voice before answering soberly.

"Yes, I'll tell you the truth, Peggy—any truth I know."

She hesitated, and warned him: "You've promised, you know." Then she asked plumply: "What was it Lester Hilton showed you at the dinner table last night? Aunt Anne said Ted's father had telephoned him from New York to come down there immediately on some business affair. Then Lester Hilton took a telegram out of his pocket and showed it to you. I'm sure, from the way he looked, that it was something about Ted. . . . I don't think I like Lester Hilton very well. What was it he showed you—honor bright?"

"It was a telegram from Ted's father at Atlantic City," Danforth replied. "I should judge that Pennell had gone down there to spend Saturday afternoon and Sunday. At any rate, he was there around 5 or 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon and wired Hilton on a matter of business. But the wire wound up with a message for Ted, as though he supposed Ted was still here."

He saw her droop under that, with veiled eyes, and gave her ample time to say something further. As she said nothing, he presently gave her some friendly advice:

"I shouldn't bother about it, if I were you, Peggy. I've found out that it's sometimes better not to know too much. I've told you about the wire because you put me on oath, but it was no good service to you. Often it's a lot better not to know too much."

She silently protested at that. How could it be better not to know too much about the person one loved? That amounted to accepting a tacit plea of guilty on his part.

"There's something I don't understand," she confessed woefully. "I know Ted hasn't done any wrong. . . . I mean he hasn't meant to do any wrong. . . . I mean any real big black wrong." It was difficult to say just what she did mean. In the difficulty she appealed to him forthright:

"There's something about that maid, Katey, you know. I sometimes thik they're trying to fool me. There's something I don't understand. You see, Teddy and I were talking about it yesterday. He told me he had nothing to do with her going away and didn't know in the least where she was." It was difficult to say, but she needed help, and here was her dearest friend in whom she trusted implicitly—a very able man, moreover, who could help if anybody could.

"Teddy and I were talking," she repeated. "And he said to me positively that he didn't see Katey at all last Thursday. He was very positive about it. He hadn't seen her at all that day—unless, of course, it might be somewhere around the house. I mean he hadn't seen her outside or anything like that. He was positive about it. Well, mother and I rode over to the Harlows beyond Stony Cove Thursday forenoon. Mother had an errand there. And when we were coming back we saw Ted's car on the road ahead of us. He stopped a little way out of Stony Cove and took Katey in the car with him. And then we saw them twice again—ahead of us on the road—driving this way, or toward Windham. I'm sure of it, Dan. I saw it myself." He saw her throat swell as she asked: "Why would Ted have told me that he didn't see her at all that day?"

An answer seemed superfluous, so he made none; and she would have been shocked if she could have known that his mind took possession of the information she had just given him with an ominous satisfaction—like a lion putting a possessive paw on a fallen deer. After a moment he repeated his friendly advice:

"Don't bother about it, Peg. It's often a mistake to know too much. Ted's only a youngster."

"But I have to bother, Dan!" she protested with pain. "I have to bother! How can I just shut my eyes? There's something. . . . I believe in Ted still—as to meaning anything wrong—any real, black wrong. But there's something. . . ." Her trouble and passion burst forth. "I mean to know! I'm going to know! I'm not going to just shut my eyes and let it go. If there was anything like that about me I'd want him to find out. I'm going to find out. You must help me, Dan. I count on you. If you find anything you must tell me—honor bright!" Her outburst ended plaintively, "I'm very miserable," and a spray of tears dimmed her eyes.

The tears moved him deeply—from her who ought to be the very spirit of joy as when she gamboled into the water. For the man who had caused them he thought savagely, "Damn the cub!" After an instant he said quietly:

"Of course you may call on me for anything I can do. Don't, at any rate, take it too seriously. It may be all some quite simple affair, easily explained—at worst a bit of heedlessness. Ted is a youngster; he's never had much discipline. Probably it's some simple enough thing, when you get the explanation."

She brightened at that, saying eagerly: "Yes, that's what I tell myself. It must be so. Only . . ." Only there was a cloud.

"Wait and see," he advised again. "Of course, if you really wish to find out what has become of the maid I can manage it for you."

That sounded rather sinister—like tracking down a criminal. But while she hesitated about that she had no hesitation in another respect.

"I know I can bank on you, Dan," she said. "I always think of you—why, like the biggest rock over there." She nodded toward one of the craggy promontories. "It's fine to have somebody like that. You know I've always loved you."

Danforth looked at the sand and muttered, "Thank God for that, Peggy."

A moment later, undecided, she stood up and said, "Shall we go back?"

That was the way of it. She gave him a cup of water from the overflowing fountain—sweetly, graciously, open heartedly—and immediately thought of something else. The fountain belonged to somebody else. He realized all that with a slight smile as he stood up and they waded into the sea. Thereafter their talk was of an incidental sort.

Danforth climbed out of the water wagon at Overlook House and went in to resume his ordinary dress while Peggy went on home. A little later he encountered his father, to whom he had something to say—a small matter, to be sure, but which still needed to be said.

"I've decided not to go back tonight," he remarked. "Looks pretty good to me up here. I think I'll stay a week."
smile.

The judge received the message with a

"Fine, Dan," he replied in a throaty tone. "You're getting wise as you grow older. This beats Wall street out of sight. Better stay a month."

"Well, hardly that," said Danforth; "but a week anyway. There isn't anything so tremendously important now—until Coombes lands the 29th or 30th."

"You think that's all right," said the judge—hardly making a question of it, for they had been over the ground before.

"Sure to be," Danforth replied confidently. "We'll fix it up with him. I'm so sure of it that I'm going to dump some more Hidalgo if the market braces up a bit."

And that subject troubled Judge Crane so little that he observed: "Glad to see this sunshine. I want to get your mother out for a spin this afternoon." That, at present, was his trouble.

"It will do her good," Danforth commented, sympathetically to his father's trouble. It was his own trouble also in a way, for he was fond of his step-mother and sincerely sorry for her affliction.

The spin, behind a pair of the judge's prize winners, came off satisfactorily—likely to do any one good, it would seem, for the road, back from the coast, wound through woods that smelled of summer, and in the smooth action of his cherished horses the judge took a delight that was akin to the artist's. Returning to the house, he drove on to the stables—mindful of the doctor's warning that he must take some bodily exercise on his legs every day. On leaving the stables, therefore, he dutifully struck out to walk a mile or more through the trees and so back to the house. Going afoot through the woods he presented a tall and still sturdy figure, in a trig brown suit and straw hat, swinging a stout walking stick—as blandly content for the moment as a worldly wise old man, with many disillusioning experiences, had any right to expect.

He had been following a bridle path for a little distance when he saw a solitary horse and rider slowly approaching. Whereupon he slackened his pace somewhat, his thick eyebrows moved slightly toward each other, and the heavily graven lines around his mouth settled into a rigid parenthesis, the corners of his mouth turning down. Evidently the rider brought something to his mind with which he was not content; he walked still more slowly. In a moment the rider looked up, saw him, and smiled, and at that he stopped, waiting for her to come up. It was Peggy Loughman, alone. Smiling—somewhat mechanically, perhaps—she drew rein as she came up to his tall figure.

Smiling also the judge observed, "Riding alone nowadays," as he passed a familiar hand along the mare's glossy neck.

"My pal has left me," she replied—with a kind of a yearning and aching toward him behind her slight smile. She had, of course, known him all her life and she was fond of him, but in a manner quite different from her fondness for Danforth. When she was a little girl the judge—kindly and often jolly—had always seemed some way tremendously grown up, a benevolent yet aloof figure engaged in great affairs beyond her ken. A certain sense of that aloofness had remained with her; she was always, so to speak, looking up at him and vaguely wondering about him. Yet she was fond of him and felt that he was fond of her. Just now she was wondering wistfully whether the tall, puissant judge could stoop down and humanly help a girl about a trouble that afflicted her heart. There was a sort of yearning and aching toward such help from him. But would he understand?

"Yes, Ted's gone away," he replied soberly to her remark—speaking in his throaty way that grated a bit as though the organs of speech needed oiling. He was looking up at her as he said it and she saw that there was a trouble, too, in his eyes. That instantly unloosed her tongue.

"Why did he go, judge?" she pleaded—intimately, like slipping her hands into his, all reserves thrown aside.

Judge Crane passed his hand along the horse's neck again, looking very gravely up at her, and waited a moment before saying:

"It was best that he should—for the present."

She caught her breath, her eyes growing rounder, and said, in a fright: "He hasn't done anything wrong, judge?"

He took another moment before answering her:

"Ted's only a youngster, Peggy. He's been given his head too early. I don't like the way the boy's been let run wild. I don't think it's good for anybody to live twenty-three years without getting acquainted with a bit and a whip. I want my colts broke early. I like his father. He's a fine man in many ways; but I'm afraid he ain't got much nerve when it comes to doing anything disagreeable to anybody he likes. Anne tells me he took his wife's death very hard. Maybe that influenced him about the boy—he couldn't bear to fetch the youngster up short. Ted certainly likes his own way, and he's certainly lazy when it comes to any real work—maybe no lazier than any normal youngster is, but the normal youngster gets it taken out of him, and nobody's ever taken it out of Ted. I wouldn't wonder if Ted had got into the way of thinking that he can have what he wants by just wanting it . . .

"You see, the boy's had a poor training, and he's only 23. There's nobody at 23 but can go ahead and make what he pleases of himself. He's still got a big margin to draw on. The mistakes don't count then like they do at 63, when the margin is pretty near used up." He smiled at her heartily as he said it. "It's a long while yet before anybody can pass a final judgment on Ted Pennell. You asked me if he's done anything wrong. He's got a frightfully wrong start."

All of which had an ominous sound to Peggy, from whose cheeks the pink tints had been fading. "He has done wrong?" she asked under her breath—for while the judge talked in generalities the concrete case of Katey, the maid, was in her mind.

But the practiced cross-examiner was not to be forced into saying more than he wished. "He's got a fearfully wrong start," he repeated. He fooled with the horse's mane a moment. She saw him slightly moisten his lips with the tip of his tongue, and understood that he was more deeply troubled than his words alone showed.

"You know, my wife is very fond of Ted," he resumed, in a lower key that brought her intimately into it. "She loves him like her own son. There's nobody in the world she loves more—maybe nobody she loves as much. You know she can't stand agitation and excitement. I have to trust to you not to say anything to her. She mustn't be disturbed about Ted."

He was looking her in the eyes and she comprehended, not without a touch of awe, that in a manner he was laying his wife's life in her hands.

"It's best for Ted to go away just now," he resumed. "Probably he doesn't like that any too well. I've no doubt he'd rather be with you. I've no doubt he loves you, and wants to be with you . . . We all love you very much, too."

He said it with a kind of dry simplicity; but he was not wont to say such things. Coming from the tall old man, she felt it to be a big declaration.

"It's been on my mind whether I ought to say anything to you," he went on. "If it should get to my wife in any way it might be bad, and maybe I've no business interfering any way. But I don't count on Ted—not now; not for a good while to come. No doubt he wants you. He might come here to see you unknown to me. Or he might send for you . . . I think I ought to say to you, my dear, that if you were my daughter I wouldn't let you marry Ted Pennell—or commit yourself to him . . . Not now. You keep away from him until we see whether he's only made a big mistake or whether he's really built that way. You mustn't trust him very far just now."

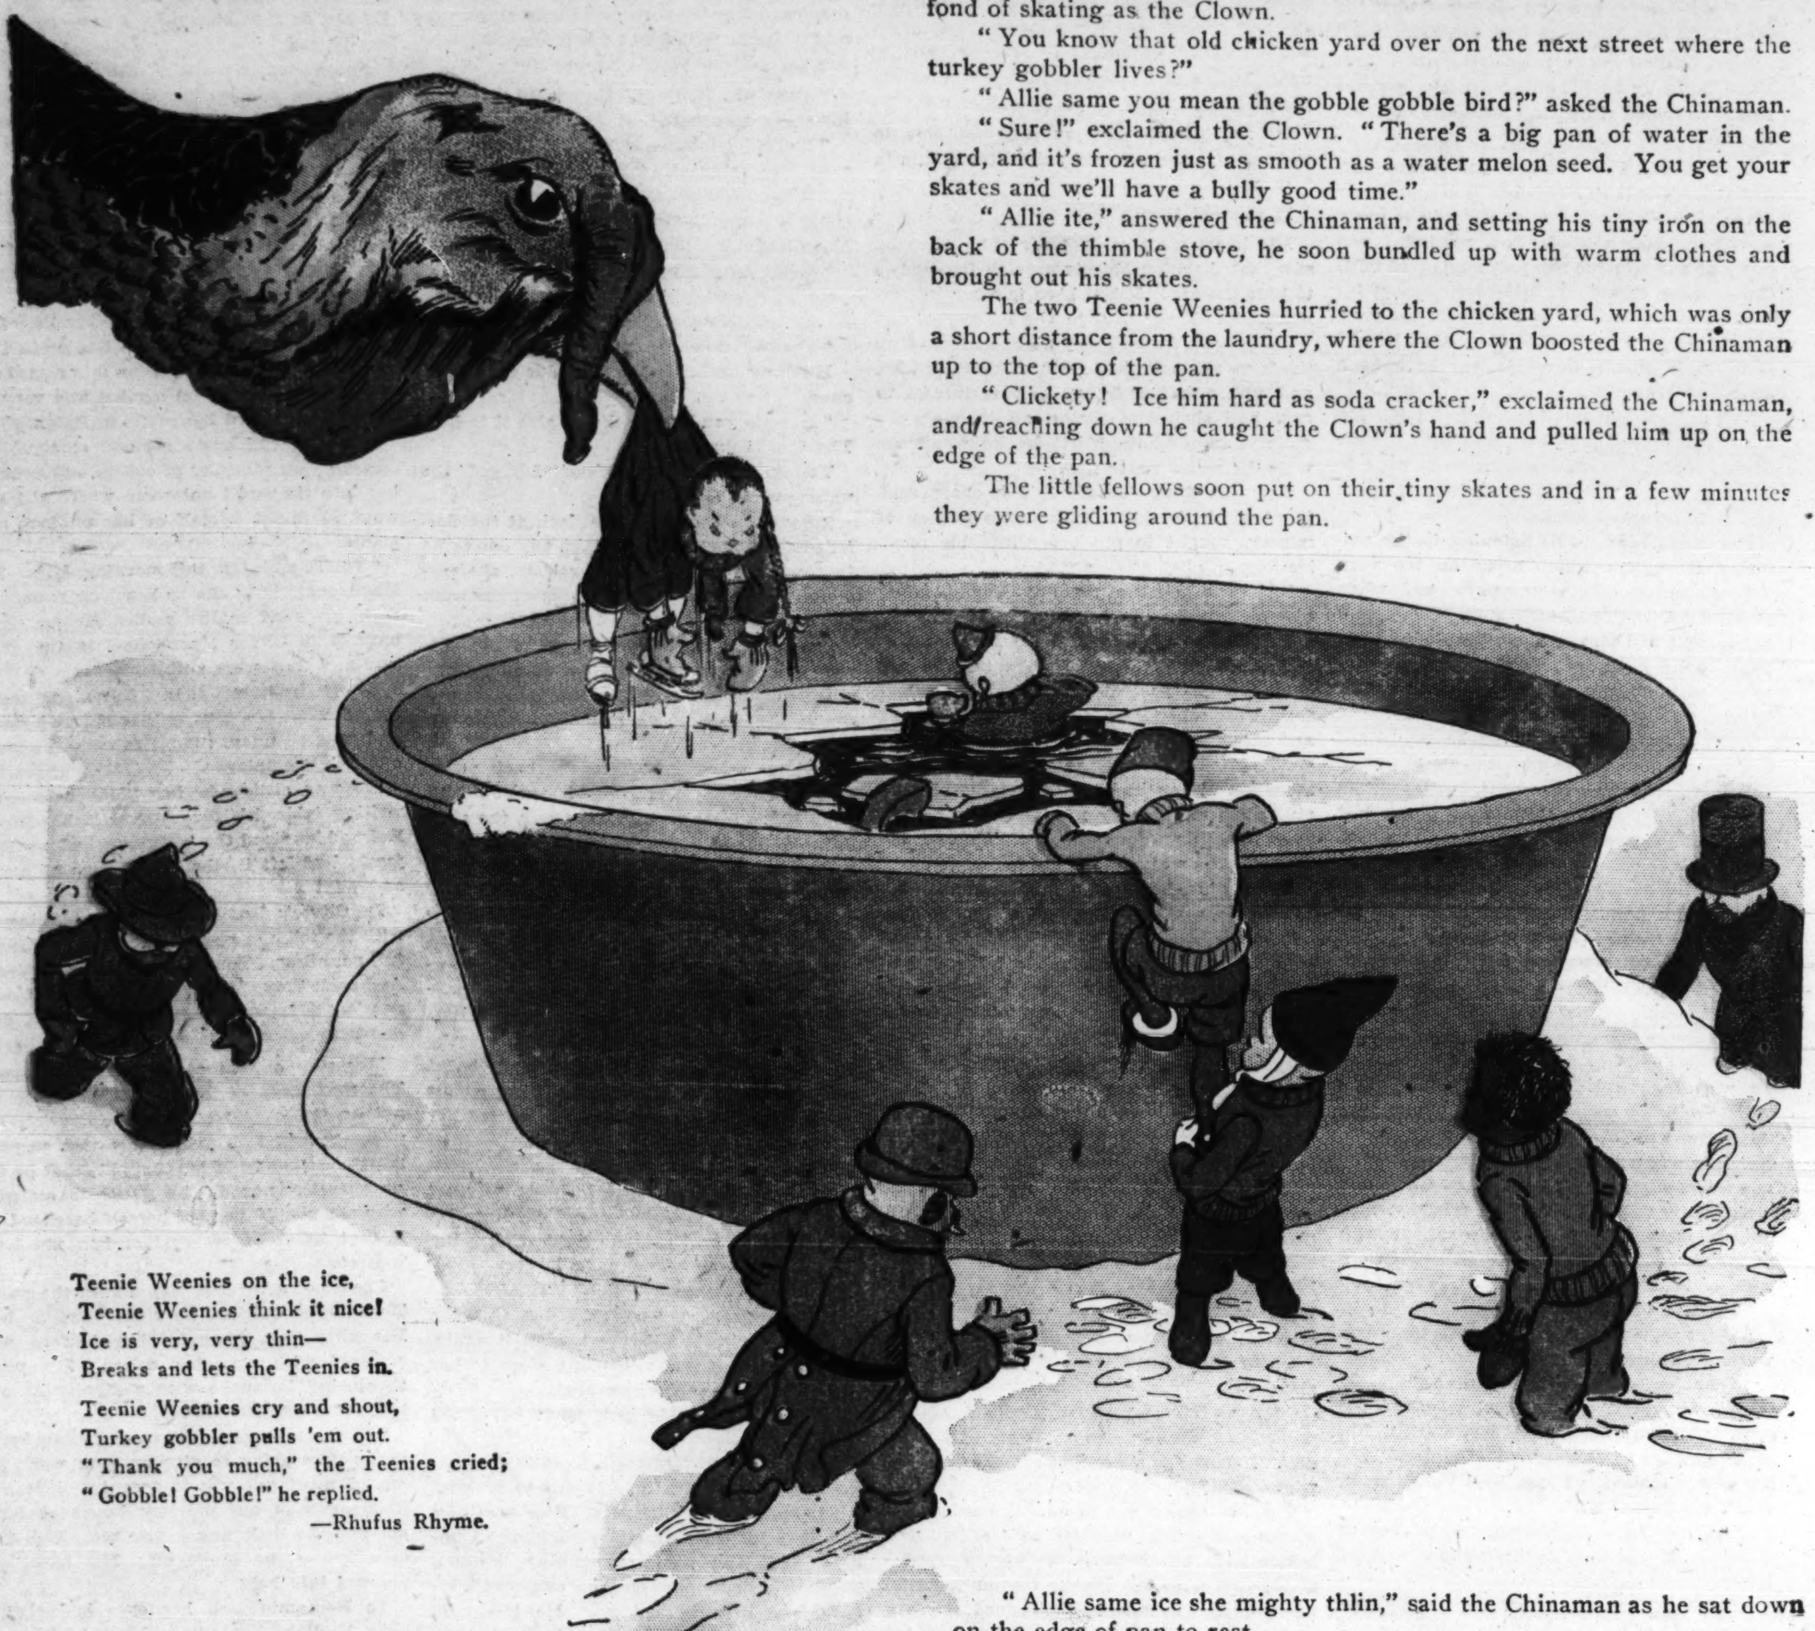
The Teenie Weenies

IT ISN'T SO TERRIBLE TO FALL INTO A PAN OF WATER. BY WM. DONAHEY.



Teenie Weenies on the ice,
Teenie Weenies think it nice!
Ice is very, very thin—
Breaks and lets the Teenies in.

Teenie Weenies cry and shout,
Turkey gobbler pulls 'em out.
"Thank you much," the Teenies cried;
"Gobble! Gobble!" he replied.
—Rhufus Rhyme.

THE above verse was written especially for the Lover twins. Rhufus Rhyme, the Teenie Weenie poet, was calling on the Lovers in their tiny bungalow one evening when she wrote the verse and recited it to the twins as they sat before the fireplace. Of course, the verse is true, for it was written about something which really happened to two Teenie Weenies, and this is the story:

It had been rather cold for several days, and a thin sheet of ice was frozen on the creek back of the rose bush under which the Teenie Weenie village stood.

Several of the little folks wanted to try out their skates, but the General warned them about getting on to the thin ice, and most of the Teenie Weenies made up their minds to wait until the ice had frozen some more.

There was one Teenie Weenie who loved to skate more than anything else, and he carefully covered his tiny skates with his sweater and slipped out of the shoe house one afternoon.

This Teenie Weenie was the Clown, and he hurried to the laundry where he found the Chinaman ironing one of the Lady of Fashion's tiny house dresses.

"Say, Chuck!" cried the Clown, pulling his skates from under his sweater. "Let's go skatin'."

"Allie same ice he no thick enough," answered the Chinaman, looking longingly through the tiny window in the old tea pot.

"Of course, it's not thick enough on the creek," argued the Clown. "But I've found a place where it's thick enough, and we can have a bully time cuttin' the figure eight and everything."

"Where go?" asked the interested Chinaman, for he was almost as fond of skating as the Clown.

"You know that old chicken yard over on the next street where the turkey gobbler lives?"

"Allie same you mean the gobble gobble bird?" asked the Chinaman.

"Sure!" exclaimed the Clown. "There's a big pan of water in the yard, and it's frozen just as smooth as a water melon seed. You get your skates and we'll have a bully good time."

"Allie ite," answered the Chinaman, and setting his tiny iron on the back of the thimble stove, he soon bundled up with warm clothes and brought out his skates.

The two Teenie Weenies hurried to the chicken yard, which was only a short distance from the laundry, where the Clown boosted the Chinaman up to the top of the pan.

"Clickety! Ice him hard as soda cracker," exclaimed the Chinaman, and reaching down he caught the Clown's hand and pulled him up on the edge of the pan.

The little fellows soon put on their tiny skates and in a few minutes they were gliding around the pan.

"Allie same ice she mighty thlin," said the Chinaman as he sat down on the edge of pan to rest.

"Well, it could be thicker," answered the Clown. "But it's thick enough to hold us.

The ice was very thin, and it might have held the two Teenie Weenies if the Chinaman hadn't lost his balance and tumbled right in the middle of the pan where the ice was the thinnest.

He fell so hard he cracked the ice, and before either of the little chaps knew what had happened they found themselves up to their necks in the cold water.

They found that it was impossible to get out for the top of the pan was just out of their reach, so the little fellows began to shout at the top of their voices.

Several of the Teenie Weenies happened to be near, and they ran to the pan as fast as they could through the deep snow, but the old turkey gobbler had heard the shouts and he arrived first.

He picked the Chinaman out of the water with his great beak, and then rescued the Clown.

Both the half frozen Teenie Weenies thanked the Turkey, but all the big fellow said was "Gobble, gobble, gobble," as he walked away towards the chicken house.

Well, to make a long story short, the two chattering Teenie Weenies were hustled to the hospital where they were given a hot bath and a good rub.

They were then put into bed, and the Lady of Fashion sat between their beds and told stories until supper time when the Cook appeared with two big acorn bowls of soup.

Mrs. Lover brought over a button piled high with Teenie Weenie doughnuts during the evening, so, considering everything, it isn't a great hardship to tumble into a pan of ice water, is it?

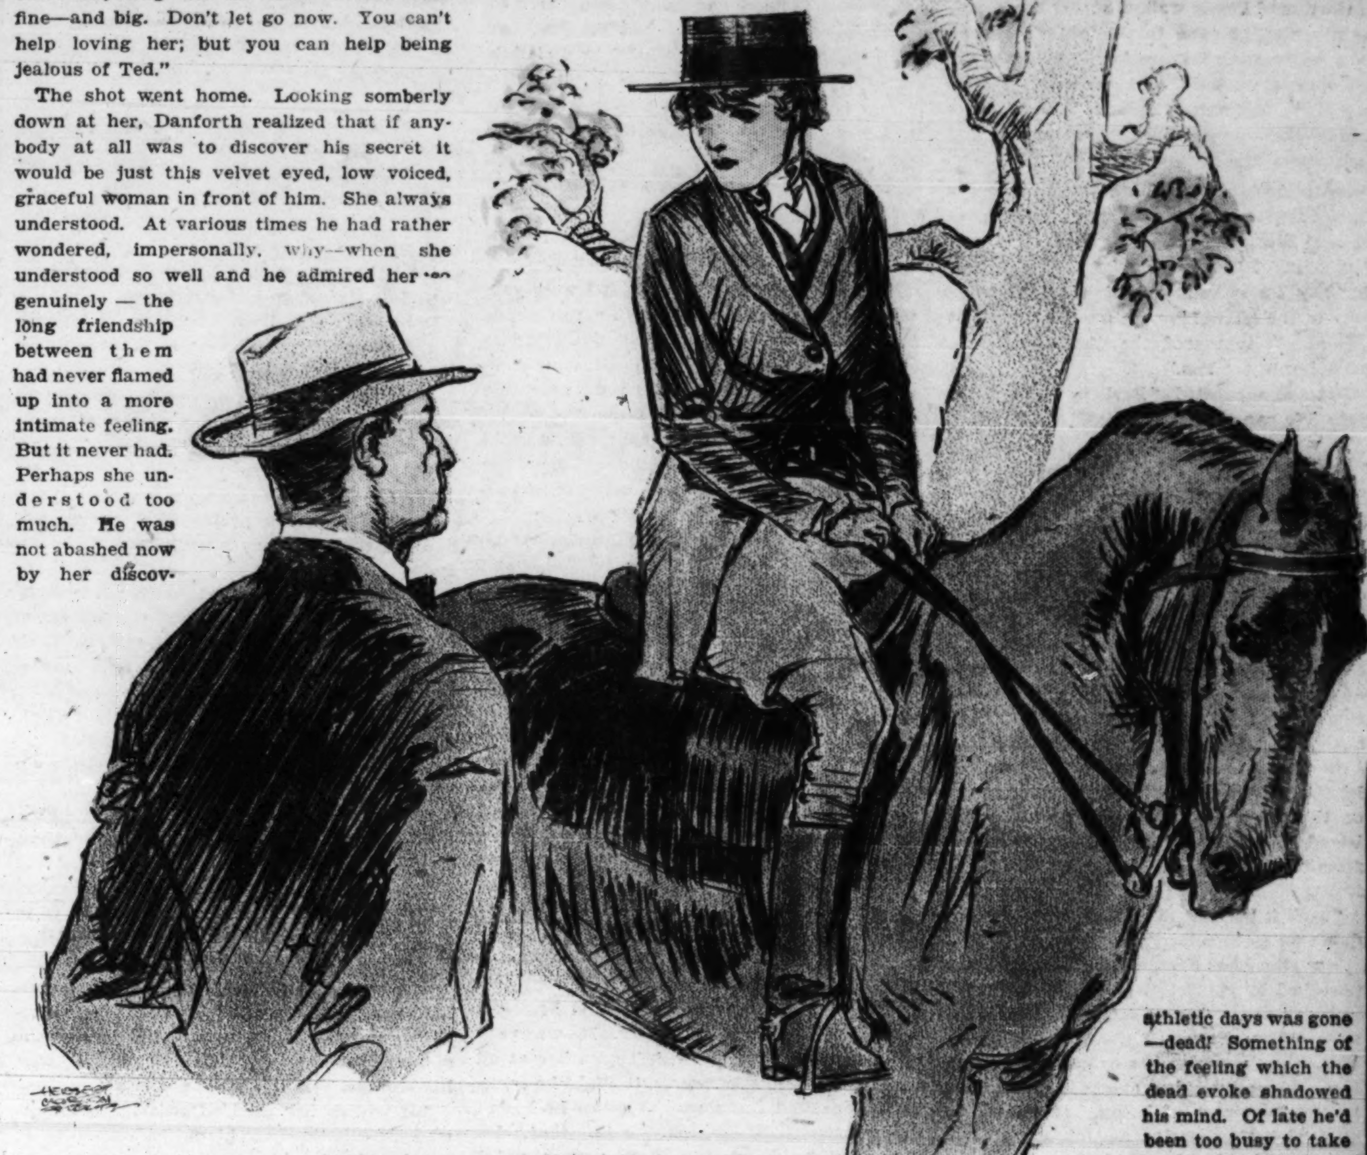
OVERLOOK HOUSE

Blue Ribbon Fiction

by Will Payne



"Why did he go, judge?" she pleaded.

THE STORY THUS FAR—Overlook House is the home of Judge Tillman Crane, a wealthy owner of oil lands, and his invalid wife. As the story opens the Cranes are entertaining as their guest Mrs. Edith Hilton, whose husband, a broker, has been handling the judge's financial interests. One afternoon Hilton summons his wife to a secret meeting at a nearby town and confesses that he has been misappropriating the Crane securities. A letter is on its way to Judge Crane which would reveal this, and Mrs. Hilton reluctantly agrees to intercept it and substitute another, which her husband gives her. To avoid recognition on her trip to town, Mrs. Hilton has borrowed the hat and cloak of Katey, a pretty maid employed at Overlook House. On her way back she is overtaken by Ted Pennell, son of her husband's partner, who mistakes her at first for the maid, and then, discovering the masquerade, gives her a lift in his car. Ted promises secrecy and treats the little adventure as a joke, but several persons have seen the supposed maid in his car—among them Peggy Loughman, Ted's fiancée, who has been angered before by young Pennell's open philandering with the girl. Meanwhile there is some perplexity at Overlook House over the fact that Katey has disappeared. The first to admit any knowledge of her whereabouts is Samuel Thorp, a town loafer, who has seen the girl lying on a pile of clothes in the laundry, covered with a coat which he recognizes as one belonging to Ted Pennell. Thorp confides his secret to Louis, the gardener, an admirer of Katey's, and Louis, in turn, tells the disturbing story to Danforth Crane, the Judge's son. Ted Pennell and Peggy Loughman have a serious falling out over the girl in Ted's car; Ted refusing stubbornly to explain the incident. Then the boy adds to the mystery of his conduct by abruptly leaving Overlook House. After dinner that night Edith Hilton questions Danforth Crane guardedly about the stocks with which her husband has been taking liberties, and asks him what he knows about Katey's disappearance.

SIXTH INSTALLMENT.

Dubious Times for Ted.

DANFORTH kept still a moment, and then only asked another question: "Do you know why Ted Pennell cleared out this afternoon?"

The question struck her with a painful suggestion, and now she caught the significance of a remark her husband had dropped in the course of his questioning about Katey's disappearance. The shock kept her silent an instant; then she exclaimed, with reproach:

"O, Dan! Surely you don't imagine Ted had anything to do with Katey's disappearance?"

The reproach in her tone seemed quite lost upon him, and he allowed himself the slight interval which—in his deliberate manner of speaking—commonly preceded a reply. Then he inquired, coolly, "Why not?"

"You know why!" she retorted. "I admit the boy's scatter brained and heedless enough. Probably he's lazy enough, too, when it comes to that dull grind in a Wall street office. He doesn't take life very seriously, and why should be? About everything he's wanted has been handed to him. I'm fond of his father, but he is about the last man I should pick out to bring up a headstrong boy. He hasn't really succeeded in bringing himself up yet. I admit Ted has been more or less spoiled. But I know him, Dan. Any such vile business as running off with a parlor maid is not in him."

There was the usual slight pause, and Danforth observed, coolly: "I didn't say there was any vile business about it. I remember the girl very well. I noticed how pretty she was myself, and I'm too busy to pay much attention to pretty rogues. Besides, I couldn't afford it—at my age and with my responsibilities. But at 23, with no responsibilities at all and an indulgent father to sign the checks, one can afford almost anything. I don't see anything especially vile about it."

"You're prejudiced," Edith murmured, as though she were saying it to herself.

"Well, so are you, Edith," he replied, calmly; "like mamma and the rest of the women folk. You're all still thinking of Ted Pennell about the way he looks in that pastel in mamma's bedroom—in yellow curls and knickerbockers, his hand on the dog's head that's almost as high as himself. You know that his legs and shoulders stick out of the picture at both ends, but you think his mind and heart are just about four years old. Ted's 23, you know—long past drums and hobby horses. I should say that Katey would be just about the toy for him now. Why do you suppose he cleared out this afternoon?"

"I don't know that," she murmured, half absently.

They had come back to the open door where the hall lights flooded across the brick terrace. She stopped there, looked up at him earnestly a moment, and said:

"Look out, Dan!"

He seemed not to understand the warning, and after an instant inquired:

"For what?"

"I thought you were fine," she went on, her dark eyes holding to his. "More than fine—big! You say there's nothing particularly vile about this. Not when he loves Peggy and Peggy loved him with all her heart, and they're the same as engaged? A housemaid, under Peggy's very eyes? Isn't there anything vile in that? You've been fine—and big. Don't let go now. You can't help loving her; but you can help being jealous of Ted."

The shot went home. Looking somberly down at her, Danforth realized that if anybody at all was to discover his secret it would be just this velvet eyed, low voiced, graceful woman in front of him. She always understood. At various times he had rather wondered, impersonally, why—when she understood so well and he admired her so genuinely — the long friendship between them had never flamed up into a more intimate feeling. But it never had. Perhaps she understood too much. He was not abashed now by her discovery; that was rather in the nature of things.

"Why shouldn't I be jealous, then?" he asked, coolly. "I'm human, too, Edith. Maybe you're by way of forgetting that as well as that Ted isn't in knickerbockers and yellow curls. If he's minded to throw the game away, why must I sit still and wag my thumbs? Why shouldn't I make a stroke for myself? . . . It's true I want her a thousand times more than I've ever wanted anything else in my life. What's wrong about that?"

"What would she say to it?" the woman replied.

Against the utmost effort of his will he was compelled to feel a certain shame. She had cuddled in his lap as a baby. In little white dresses, her hair tied up in a ribbon, she had run to him as naturally as to her father. She had sat on the arm of his chair and kissed him when her toes reached the ground. She had always loved him tremendously, in that way. Why must there be shame in his wanting her to love him differently? Yet there was a certain shame in it, which he resented as unreasonable.

"Probably it would shock her—just now," he admitted. "Probably she's never thought of me in that way. But the change wouldn't be so great."

That little change! The idea of the girl—shining with grace, her presence a perfume—came upon him, suffusing his heart. His eyes appealed to the woman before him.

"I'm human, too," he muttered. "If Ted gives the game away, why must I sit still?"

"But he hasn't given it away," she insisted.

"Well, we shall see," he replied, and drew his hand across his forehead. He evidently wished to say no more, for he stepped toward the door.

Mrs. Hilton entered the house with disquietude and alarm in her mind. She knew Danforth Crane almost too well—old, it was true, from Peggy's point of view, and heavy and dark; yet powerful and formidable; a big force indefinitely ranging itself in hostility to scatter brained, heedless, inexperienced Ted Pennell. She felt sure Ted had nothing to do with Katey's disappearance; yet she had to shiver a little as she went upstairs.

And there she was to meet her husband, who also, as she now understood, had something about Ted Pennell on his mind. There was a great difference, however. Her husband was not one to make her shiver for his enemies, but only for himself.

In their own room she told him, under her breath, what Danforth had said about Hidalgo Petroleum. But he flouted it, saying, scornfully:

"Of course, he'd cover his tracks; any fox does that. If he said sell, it's all the more reason for not selling."

"O, no!" she replied, despairingly. "I tell you, you're wrong. Danforth isn't a fox. He's a bear. You're wrong! Sell the stock Monday!"

This opposition only exasperated him—partly because in the depths of his heart he had a fearful foreboding that she might be right.

"Sell!" he repeated, as though she had offered him an insult. "How can I sell? You talk like a crazy woman! Haven't I told you I've got to hang on until I can get out of the hole? But he's lying to you. I know, I tell you! I know!"

And in all this obstinate vehemence and exasperation she saw too well the signs of incurable weakness. Terrified over his situation, he was really incapable of making a strong, steady effort to extricate himself, and could only sit like an animal, panic-stricken and paralyzed, waiting for what would happen.

And since he would not move, she, too, must wait passively for what would happen.

A little before 11 o'clock on Sunday morning Danforth Crane stood in his spacious bedroom on the second floor of Overlook House surveying himself—with a poignant edge of regret in his mind fairly as when one looks at the dead. In a manner he was looking at the dead.

He was clad in a brown bathing suit, trimmed with black stripes at top and bottom—a costume which ruthlessly disclosed what a skillful tailor managed pretty well to conceal. Undeniably he was getting fat. The bathing suit revealed a paunch—almost threw a spotlight on it—which his well made every day clothes kept in the background. His mighty legs and powerful shoulders were too well padded with flesh—the legs hairy also, like the backs of his hands and wrists. This was no figure of youth. The figure that had excited admiration in his athletic days was gone—dead! Something of the feeling which the dead evoke shadowed his mind. Of late he'd been too busy to take decent care of himself. He resolved to look up Mulligan and get himself in condition again; he'd find the time somehow, if he had to take it at night.

He lit a cigaret, thrust his feet in bath slippers, and slipped on a long gray waterproof coat—which was better. He then went downstairs, left the house by the west door, and walked out into the strong sunshine by the roadway—a superb day, cloudless, and the whole wooded, flowery landscape vividly alive in the full tide of later June!

A moment later he saw the car coming—the old closed car which they used for bathing and called the water wagon. Peggy was still practicing the woman's subterfuge of looking pleasant, however she felt, and as he opened the car her voice lilted gayly at him, "Hello, Dan!" She was curled in the corner of the seat, in a bathing suit, too, a tan colored waterproof coat loosely around her, a blue cap over her hair. And, while the beach dress made him look older, it made her look younger. A sweet arm outside the tan cocoon shone like the wing of an escaping butterfly; her smiling eyes and curved lips set a strong snare; concealing her hair under a cap gave her a roguish suggestion of masquerading as a boy. He was penetrated by a feeling that her charm touched perihelion at that instant; never again could she be quite that, and it could never have been quite that before. And as he settled himself he was aware of how the old seat cushion sagged under his hundred and ninety-six pounds as though a brick had been tossed into the scale against a feather—for she weighed practically nothing; with a spring from her toes and a spread of wing she could float away.

She began chattering to him about the loveliness of the day and anticipations of the first dip of the season. The chatter was all on the surface, however. She had telephoned him at 10 o'clock that she would call for him at 11, as they had agreed the day before. But when they agreed the day before she had supposed that Ted would be with them. Now Ted had disappeared, abruptly, without notifying her. There was a pull at her heart; and sad, pestering thoughts, like persistent gnats, infested her mind in spite of herself. But she held all that beneath the surface, shining and bubbling to him.

The run to the beach was a matter of four minutes, and they climbed out of the car, shedding their waterproofs. On that rock bound coast beaches suitable for swimmers

Fashions Beauty Contests

SKIRTS OF SPORT SUITS ARE STILL PLAITED

by CORINNE LOWE

department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

EW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—The new sports toggery claims masculine lines on one side of the family and feminine color on the other. In this the whilom severity of the one is softened and offset by ous infusion of outdoor chromes without which the woman declines to become interested in the skirts, weaters, the jackets, scarfs, and et ceteras associated the garments for the golf links, the tennis court, the rinks, the bridle path, and so on; not forgetting the who herself abjures the life strenuous but who can forego the lure of sports clothes if only that she may rly fit herself into the sartorial frame of the mere ker and bystander.

r all of these provision has been amply made. And on may be according to individual needs influenced by time, the place—and the girl. The models intended for below the Mason and Dixon line are a bit more extrava- as to fabrics and a hue or so more brilliant as to color. rtain instances they are frankly of the fad class; if they ve the probational period of their southern exposition will have the chance to circulate more generally during rthern spring and summer.

feature that has been generally agreed upon is the nance of the plaited skirt. Not only is it modish but ne of the most convenient of all skirt fashions as ap- to sports exigencies. Moreover, it affords marked con- with the more or less masculine hang of the jacket— latter usually of contrasting fabric and color, belted, loosely flowing, or romantically caped by way of dis- differences, even if not of emphatic consistency.

ck and its great foil, white, have been most effectively ed in sports costumes. Always when there is a veri- outburst of color, a running over, as it were, of splashy the black and the white are brought into play as a to, no less than as a background for, the other sort. women prefer that combination.

t it will be found that the sports wardrobe is bound to de color, too. Indeed, it cannot be foregone, no matter Puritan one's ancestry or how conservative the individ- taste. With spring comes the craving for color. The analysts know this fact well. They give rein to it in joyous outdoor garments.

mong the newer fancies is a skirt of black velvet plaided broad markings of white angora wool. It is side plaited generous fashion and topped by a jacket of black worsted ted along sweater lines. By way of linking it with the rt there is a Tuxedo scarf-collar of white angora. The es should be white and the hose black, if one wants to be ctly up to date and the contour of the ankles faultless. erwise, the all-black or the all-white footwear is better retion.

t may be said that a sports getup of this sort is quite ropriate for town wear. Once upon a time it was consid- questionable taste to confound the wardrobe by making n and country clothes interchangeable. Latterly, how- custom has sanctioned the appearance of the rather ded model in black and white, beige and brown, blue mastic. Worn with the small hat and with correct pedal erings there is a good deal to be said in favor of the sports costume.

who long for brand new effects may rejoice that tiles are to be shown along with those of satin. Serge English flannels have been revived, particularly in white. They consort marvelously well with gay toned jackets such as grass green, hunters' pink, yellow, and indigo blue. Mostly they are plaited, sometimes depending from a yoke and frequently displaying pockets as their inherent possession and not as a special style attribute.

Another phase of the sports costume has to do with the wearing of homespun, tweed, cheviot, and the like. The idea, of course, hails from England, where the sport is the thing and the toggery thereof is of minor importance.

To the Englishwoman the getup of the pseudo-sportswoman of America is a strange and weird thing, second only to that of her French cousin. At least we of this country have learned to wear flat-heeled shoes, even though we have not generally adopted the knitted wool hose with our spring and summer golf or tennis suit.

In France the high-heel shoe and silk stocking, along with a fancifully trimmed hat, remain striking components of the outing garb. But then, as we all know, the French woman does not go in for outdoor activities. It is her wish to compliment her English sister that leads her to emulate her after her own inconsistent but delightful fashion.

In contrast to the tweeds and homespuns are the suits of crêpe de chine allied with angora. Sometimes the coat only will be of the soft silk which Paris favors above all others at the present moment. And it may be of some flamboyant color that puts to shame nature's own prodigal display.

For example, there is a skirt of white sports satin worn with a belted and bloused jacket of orange crêpe de chine collared and bordered with white angora. Its real locale is the sand hued playground of some Florida resort.

Duvetyn is an all year material. It has been claimed by the outing world because it lends itself admirably to the making of separate jackets whose gloss simulates suede and accentuates the outing suggestion. One finds it in wood green associated with dove gray, with oyster white, with tan. Sometimes all these colors enter into the plaided scheme of the skirt, while the monotone green envelopes the upper part of the figure. A fuzzy tam of green worsted is the proper headgear.

Capes have become a habit. They are differentiated according to materials and trimmings. One may wear them to the opera or to the race course, or they may serve manifold utilitarian purposes, prosaic, romantic, or otherwise.

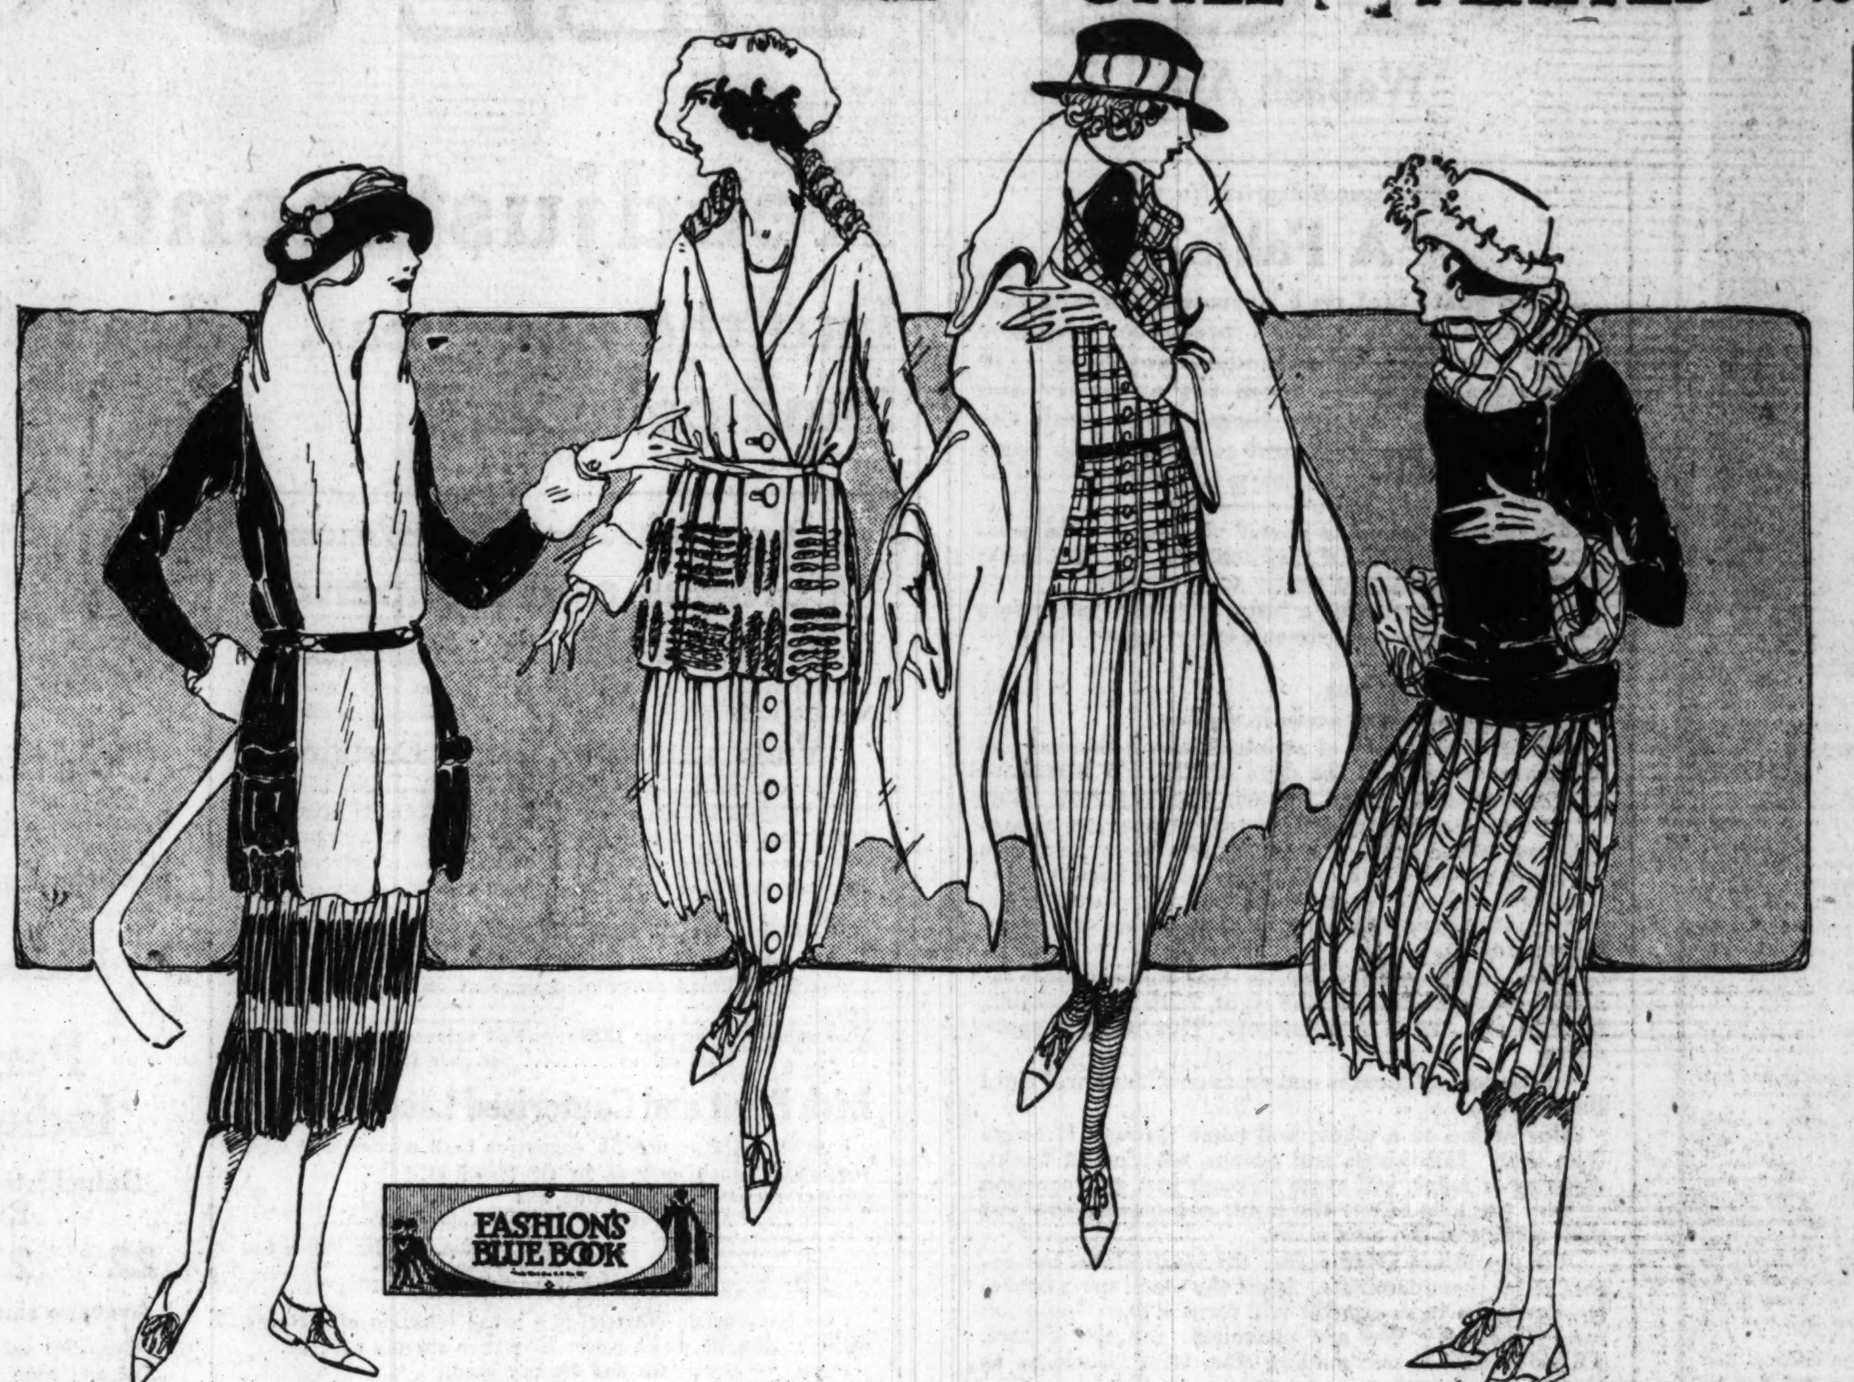
Gray has been sponsored for a smartly built cape of duvetyn that partly conceals and partly reveals a plaited skirt of the same. A dash of color is added by way of seasoning the ensemble. It is found in the waistcoat of checked gloveskin which has the basic gray interrupted by little blocks of cobalt blue.

Stripes are being advanced for the separate skirt, not with any unkind intention of ousting the attractive checks and expansive plaids, but rather with the idea of adding that variety which is the spice of any given fashion. The noblest Roman of them all will adopt the stripes supposed to be copied from the ancient textiles of Italy, and will modify these by a bodice sweater affair of a plain color, gay, neutral, or black. After the Roman designs the black and white effects seem to be advocated.

Of course, there are the jerseys, woolen and silk, with preference for the former in the rather coarser weaves. The heather mixtures are perennial favorites, and there are lovely delft blues, cool looking tans, and that lovely shade of green that is a-tune with the early days of spring.

Generally speaking, the jersey suits are modeled on semi-tailored lines and work with a linen or washable silk shirt, collared and cravated after the manner of the Quartier Latin; or stocked and enswathed à la Henry Clay. With the tailored suit of jersey there are seen sailor hats of silk beaver, antique satin, or straw banded with soft leather.

A lot of worsted work trims sports models, whether of silk, worsted, or some cotton fabric. Then there are fine shavings of patent leather or cire satin worked in with the worsted embroideries. Appliqué motifs have lost little of their vogue. The distinctive note lies in the manner of its employment, not in the decoration itself.



FROM left to right: A plaited velvet skirt is banded by stripes of white angora by way of claiming relationship to the black sweater generously supplied with a Tuxedo collar of white angora. The second lady wears a brilliantly oranged jacket of crepe de chine with a skirt of oyster white silk, the fuzzy-wuzzy trimming being of white angora. She of the blanket waistcoast and mannish neckpiece is carelessly enveloped in a cape of gray duvetyn cut from the same piece as the skirt. Topping a skirt of green and brown plaided serge is a tight fitting blouse of green duvetyn, the muffler collar and the cuffs of the plaid material.

by Doris Blake
Maude Martin Ellis

"WHEN a star falls, it is a sign that some one the angels love is sinning on earth," so say the supertitious minded.

Whenever a mortal falls in sin,
Tears fall from the angels' eyes,
And that is why at times there fall
Bright stars from out the skies.

Two stars close together, near the moon, are a sign of fire.

The pole star is called Cynosure, and means the observed of all observers. Cynosure was an Indian nymph, one of the nurses of Zeus.

The Mandan Indians believe that the stars are deceased men. When a child is born its star descends to earth and inhabits a human form. After death it reascends to the heavens.

Every man has his star. When a star shoots, it is a sign that the man to whom it belongs is dead.

The Arabs believe that falling stars are stones thrown by the angels at devils who are trying to get into paradise.

If there are any falling stars on a fine summer's evening, it is a sign of thunder.

The beautiful stars that shine brightest belong to people whom God especially loves, his elect, who have accomplished many good works and have never displeased him.

The Negroes say that when the stars are so thick that there is no space between them for your finger tip, it will rain next day.

If a star seems to move, wish and you will get what you wish for.

Spit three times for luck when a star falls and make your heart's wish.

The comet of 43, B. C., which appeared after the assassination of Julius Cæsar, was looked upon by the Romans as being a celestial chariot sent to convey his soul heavenward.

It is lucky to see the first star at night and say:

Star light, star bright, first star I've seen tonight:
I wish I may, I wish I might, have the wish I wish tonight.

Many stars in winter indicate frost.

In summer, when many stars twinkle, clear weather is indicated.

Observe carefully the dipper which is called "the lucky group of stars," and you will be fortunte for a week to come.

When the stars begin to huddle,
The earth will soon become a muddle.

When the stars flicker in a dark background rain or snow follows soon.

To see the great dipper on your first glance at the sky at night means that your cup of joy will soon be full.

Comets signify corruptions of the air. They are signs of earthquake, of wars, of changing kingdoms, great dearths of corn, yea, a common death of man and beast.

Tennyson calls Venus the planet of love.

A house beside which a star has fallen will soon have a death.

If you see the dipper in the heavens as you go on a business trip you will be successful.

That your sight may never be dim, when you see a star fall or fly across the sky count quickly before it disappears, and as many numbers as you can count, so many years will you be able to see clearly without glasses.

If in looking out of the window the moon shines full in your face you will have a bad fall.

A popular superstition declares that when any one is born a new star appears in the heavens. It remains burning as long as the person lives, but at his death it disappears. It influences his destiny throuhgout his life. Christ's star was the star of Bethlehem, a glorious object, shining with wonderful luster.

Select the number of stars in a constellation, add to it the number of the date of your birth, and divide the whole by twelve. Keep the result in your mind until you shake hands with some one, then add the letters in that person's name to what you have. Divide by seven and you will get the number of months before you are married. If it should run over thirteen and be even you will marry a young man; if uneven, an old one. If over twice thirteen and even, he will be red headed; if uneven, he will be bald and rich.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

Old Enough to Decide.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 24. He is 26. We have been the best of friends since childhood. I have worn his diamond for over a year now. He is not rich, but has an excellent position. To say that we love each other, absolutely, is needless. But I do not want to be married yet. Possibly not for several years. You know a married woman's responsibilities are so great and I am not ready to meet them yet. Although he respects my right to set the marriage date, he almost insists that it be this winter, and seems to feel hurt that I cannot give him even an approximate date for the future. Please help me to explain to him, as I cannot seem to make him understand. "JOSLYN."

I am in the same position of not being able to understand you as he is. If you are not willing at 24 to assume the responsibilities I am afraid you are not in love. You talk like a 17 year old girl instead of a full fledged woman of 24.

Why Not Speak?

"Dear Miss Blake: I went out with a young man for quite some time, and one evening we had a little misunderstanding. He has never come to see me since, and if we meet he always ignores me. I really like him, and have heard that he does, too, but is waiting for me to speak first. What would you advise me to do? ANXIOUS."

Speak. Even if it hurts your pride. Nobody's happier for carrying a "mad," and two are usually happier after one having spoken first.

Into the new year. Read the Fable in left hand column.

(Business Editorial No. 3)

A Fable

Two goats met on a narrow mountain passage, high above a deep precipice. Neither would give way by conceding anything. On both sides there was room for an easier and safer passage. Each determined to push the other out of the way, and so both goats went over the precipice and down to oblivion.

Do men ever emulate goats? No—not in the present industrial situation if they continue doing business; if not normally, then as nearly so as possible.

No one likes to take a bitter pill—and yet, before there is complete readjustment, every one will take his pill.

Better take it smiling.

There is no help or sense in wailing.

There were periods of serious business changes and readjustment even in the days of Pharaoh and those of the "Prince of Peace." Strong men overcame them.

All business history plainly tells of business slumps —prices falling—men pushed. There were men in a thousand periods in the past who lost all because they hung on too long. They would not sell, adjust, manufacture, loan money or work at a reasonable wage on a falling market.

Now, then, let us remember that fundamentals remain unshaken—faith in the right, faith in the nation, faith in men, faith in ourselves. This inspires confidence.

In the coming months and years conditions will right themselves.

Our nation as a whole will come through stronger than ever. Individuals and groups, whether in banks, industry or labor, will come through just in proportion as they are able to see the light, and quickly readjust their affairs to the new order.

We would not avoid seeing the weak places but refuse to let them dominate. Meet the weak spots bravely—dominate them—and it will form a basis for quick reconstruction. We are optimistic for the future. TEAMWORK is our guiding star, with "Business as Usual" our slogan.

And goats will continue to meet on the edge of a precipice.

IS PRESENT DAY DRESS IMMODEST?

What do you think about the present day dress? Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard, says it is indecent. Do you think so or not? Do you approve of the modern maid's rouged cheeks and abbreviated skirts, or not? Do you think her morals different than those of the maid of a decade or so ago as the result of her dress vagaries? The Tribune will pay $1 for every letter published on this much discussed topic. Send along your opinion. Write on one side of page only. Address Miss Antoinette Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

From the Health Angle.

I believe every fair minded reader will admit that each woman has a perfect right to make herself as beautiful, attractive, and graceful as she can. In fact, it is woman's duty to improve her looks if she can do so with little personal touches.

But the question is this: "Do the extremely tight and short skirts, rouge, and padded ears make the woman more graceful and beautiful?" Heaven may have known, but earth never did, how many, many women had crooked ankles, too fat or too thin legs, bow legs, and even knock knees, until the short and tight skirts came into fashion. To emphasize a poor outline does not add beauty, and to try to walk in one of the extremely tight skirts does not speak for graceful movement.

I am looking at the matter from the standpoint of a business woman. I have thirty young girls working under me in a large office. They are a wonderful makeup! One girl who sits nearer my desk than do the others is studied even more closely than the rest. One day she said: "How is it that you are so many years older than I and yet have a smooth, healthy looking complexion and no pimples?"

I gave her a long look and then answered: "Rouge!"

Some days she has so much rouge rubbed into her cheeks that the poor skin would have a hard time performing its function. Bright red and ugly looking pimples outline her rouged cheeks like a row of trees surround a peaceful lake. She has large ankles, long legs, and large feet, and when she hurries down the aisle of the large office room I always think of old Rose, the cow that headed the herd on my father's farm. She wears low shoes all winter, and many days comes to her work through a drenching rain, and sits for hours with wet ankles. She has such a pad of hair over her ears that it is difficult to dictate letters to her in a moderate tone and feel sure she is catching every word.

I do not regard these things so much a question of beauty and modesty as I do a matter of preparing for future years. There is the health to consider, and it always comes first, or should come first. Our city gives many hundreds of dollars each year to the tuberculosis society to be used in fighting tuberculosis, and the girls by their indifference to the laws of health keep adding to the ranks of the tuberculosis patients.

I am a firm believer in good appearance; in fact, I hide many of my own deficiencies, but not under tight, short skirts, padded ears, rouged cheeks, and plucked eyebrows. I have a son in my home, a college professor, who loves beauty in every form, and I know his opinion of inconsistent styles.

K. L. H.

Lillies Are Few.

You cannot paint the lily. Maybe not, but how many of us are lilies? Those women endowed by nature with a clear, fine skin are darlings of the gods, but they are few. The majority of us look better with a little touching up.

As for a touch of rouge, a fluff of powder, or a short skirt making a woman immoral, it is preposterous. Immorality springs from something deeper, more subtle than this. A good woman is a good woman however gayly clad.

I have frequently noticed that men who, at home, talk loudest against make-up women, are the first to cast an admiring glance at the "doll." Have you never heard a man raving over some girl's wonderful color, which you well know came from the dainty little vanity?

To use make-up daintily, effectively is an art. To smear it, to daub it, in short to advertise the fact that your complexion is artificial, is a crime.

A woman without rouge nowadays is an anomaly, a drab sparrow among a flock of red birds. What chance has she?

Put it on, girls. But get it on straight and don't feel you must use the whole box full of it at once.

"R. G."

Words and Actions.

Practically every man, regardless of his age, admires a good looking woman. No man likes to have his wife meet him at the door with her hair smelling of fried potatoes, but when she goes to take the shine off her nose and some of the pallor off her cheeks he says she is trying to attract the attention of other men and all the while she is doing it for him.

I am a 1921 girl and hear all sorts of remarks along the line of "she's only out for a good time," and so on. Women need not mind remarks of this kind. They are simply reflections on the men who make them.

Men are so illogical. They preach to their wives and sisters about the folly of present day dress, but the women who attract them are the ones who go to extremes in everything.

So mind not their talk. Some of their fads and dress are as bad or worse than ours.

The BECOMINGNESS OF FURS

by Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply send a stamped, addressed envelope. This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

WANDERING through the fur stores, showing myself a wonderful time trying on silver foxes and Russian sables, simple little frivols to hide a swany neck or a double decked chin with the petty little sum of $1,500 or thereabout, I picked up a little information about furs for the young and furs for the would be young, and how to keep them after the great decision has been made.

After examining the price tags, one was forced to query with a prudent conscience whether it were not better to put your money in a diamond ring, and shiver.

Doesn't Do to Shiver.

Living in the restless age, however, we decide it would never do to shiver, since we'd shiver alone were we to decide on such a course. And who wants to be a red nosed shiveree? I ask you.

It would require a lot more moral stability than the present age seems to exact to turn a deaf ear on the pleadings of the fox and the squirrel, the krimmer and the caracul, the baby lamb and the 'possum to take 'em home and be kind to them, in return for which they promise warmth and beauty —aye, and luxury if you're willing.

No Fur Age Distinction.

"What furs do you sell to the young maids?" I asked the distinguished looking man who's been handling the fur trade in a big store for years.

"Which young maids do you mean, the debutantes or their grandmammas?" he queried. "There is no fur age distinction any more than calendar age. A few years ago a black fur bought for the young miss would have been as bad form as a tiara, but now it's the merry little maid who walks off with the blacks—seals and foxes—and mink, leaving the light gray squirrels and the krimmer for the older generation.

"However, where I can use my influence, I advise for the young, squirrel, caracul (taupe), taupe squirrel, light fitch, stone marten, opossum, beaver, and raccoon, with an eye to selling the seals and minks, the dark fitch, the broadtails, and black caraculs to the older set.

White Fox to Return.

"The yellow fox and the white fox, popular a few years back, were decidedly becoming to the young maid, but their popularity was run out with the hideously cheap imitations. So these two animals had to be dyed to disguise themselves, and be sold over again. But, there are already signs of the return of the white fox, and, after all, what's more flattering to the peach-blown young miss than it?

"The choice of fur," he confided to me out of his experience, "is one of practicability rather than exact becomingness. For instance, the seal with its reputation for hard wear is most popular on that account. That's why you see so many young misses wearing them. Softened, however, with a collar of longer haired fur, it does very well."

Choose Becoming Color.

There are distinct colors in furs as in dress material, though, of course, not as varied, and the becoming color to skin and eyes and hair is important in fur choosing. Many women, for example, would never buy a gray of any shade for a dress or hat—but because it is fur they will walk off with a squirrel or a mole coat with the consciousness of a deed well done. It requires a fairly brilliant coloring to withstand this shade. With a tendency to colorlessness or ashiness of skin, the gray or taupe fur accentuates it.

The Hudson bay sables, enveloping every tone from a light yellow brown to an almost black brown, may be chosen becomingly by almost every woman. The taupe caracul is extremely becoming to that lovely bronze toned blonde you see now and then.

Trying to Decide.

During my sojourn I saw a lovely brunette trying on a fitch coat, the yellowish base of the fur gleaming faintly through an overgrowth of long black hair. The collar and cuffs were of skunk. The hat she was wearing carried the same soft yellow and black idea, and she made a charming picture. Debating upon it, she tried on a georgeous long squirrel cape coat which effected luxury but not becomingness.

During this little intermission my adviser told me he sold a $15,000 chinchilla coat the day before. I tried to pry from him the name of the extravagant-ee, but he left me in the same state of curiosity I must leave you—for professional reasons, he explained.

"Chinchilla," he told me, "comes from a rat family of South America." But he cracked no little joke about the rodent's exalted position in the fur family.

Short Hair Fur Wears Best.

"No long hair fur will wear as well as the short," he said. "In spite of that more fox furs for neckwear are sold than any other pieces. The dyed foxes are reasonable, and of every color—taupe, slate, natural blue, brown, black. The silver fox" [here producing several beauties from a vault, tagged $1,350, $1,600 and $1,700] "comes from Russia, Alaska, and Prince Edward island, and is the most expensive single skin neck fur of all.

"For coats," he continued, "women want the soft furs that drape well, which accounts for the decease of Persian lamb, a most hardy fur.

"If you want to give your readers a really good tip," he advised, "tell them not to have their furs dry cleaned. With the pelts so thin, gasoline or naphtha will dry out the skin and it will crack. After you get the natural oils out of furs they are no good.

Care of Furs.

"If furs get wet, hang them in a cool room and let them dry naturally. Don't brush them, but shake them out next morning after they are dry. Hang them free from anything. With the neck pieces, when shaking them, hold the head down on table and shake the rest of the fur. Then rub hand up and down the fur to make the hair stand up.

"Water does fur good. That's what we use in cleaning all our furs. Then whipping the furs to get the dust and dirt out is the best way. Lay the fur on the table and after whipping it thoroughly shake it well.

"For the dirty neck trouble many women complain of after wearing furs a while—take a brush and damp it, brush lightly around the neck band of the fur and let it dry naturally. Next morning cover part with a little mahogany sawdust (which you may get at a planing mill) and whip the dust and grease out."

Another good tip he gave me was that when cutting fur never use scissors. Cut with a knife and on the wrong side of the fur.

Beauty Answers

DOUBLE CHIN: GET IT WHEN it's young. It's a disfiguring young offspring, and should be curbed in its infancy. First, make your chin hold itself up like a self-respecting citizen. Put a sign on your neck: No loafer allowed. And then to make the extra chin still more ill at ease twist your head to the right, to the left, backward and forward, and do it as if you meant to evict the poacher without any more ado. Follow this exercise after you have repeated it ten or fifteen times with a massage of the neck followed by an ice rub, and the first thing you know you will have a nice young face again. If you want to see a picture of just how it is done and a few more details on the subject—send me a s. a. e.

BALDY: I'VE NEVER KNOWN A time in the history of this department when there's been such a wholesale shedding of hair and such agonized wails in my mail. One's name in a newspaper scandal could not evoke more genuine agony than a brush full of one's treasured locks. Basically, the trouble is of the general system, for a poor circulation, digestive troubles, or any marked physical ill will be reflected in the condition of scalp and hair. I have an opinion that the nervous, worried, restless age we live in is responsible for much of this scalp bereavement. The first thing is to correct the physical ill and then to get after the mental ill. After all, if we are going to worry ourselves sick over getting an extra hat or two, what will it profit us if there remain no locks to pin the headgear to? And so on, down the line of other foolish wants. However, Baldy, I have some advice and local treatment, including a tonic and daily brushing, which will help curb the ghastly procession of departing locks. Please send s. a. e.

WHAT has been your funniest traveling experience on sea or on land? Your eyes and ears are usually more sensitive to sights and sounds when you are in an unaccustomed environment. Remember how your fellow passengers—perfect strangers—all seemed to be staring at you when you absent-mindedly . . . ? Probably didn't seem funny at all to you at the time. You have done your laughing since. The thing to do is to recall in detail the situation that lingers in memory. The Tribune will pay $1 for every letter published on "My Funniest Traveling Experience." Address Traveling Experiences, The Tribune, Chicago. Please write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned.

LOVE LETTERS

How does a love letter contest appeal to you? Don't you love to read them? Don't you love to receive them? Can you write a good one yourself? The Tribune is going to pay $5 for every love letter published. So, if you can write a good one—or if you have one in your private or family possessions you would like to enter in the contest, send it to Doris Blake, The Tribune, Chicago. As no letters will be returned, send copies of the ones you wish to retain possession of.

DOUBT AND CERTAINTY.

BELOVED: Your letter reached me this morning, and such a racing torrent of memories that are dear swirled through my heart. It is the most wonderful letter Uncle Sam ever carried. Each reading leaves me aglow with joy.

How much I wish my arms need not remain listless at my sides. Through shadowed years I have not been able to believe a man like you could be found in all this wide world. And now, out of my night of doubting, you come straight to me with all that my life needs to transform it into the sunshine of deep happiness.

Dear man o' mine, I am bewildered and frightened lest by lagging I hinder your progress or by unsuspected limitations I fall short of your ideals.

I long unspeakably for your return, yet wonder if I am broad visioned enough to make you a fitting mate. You are so much finer and bigger than any heart hungry musings of mine could depict that I feel I can never meet requirements—save in one way.

I love you wholly and quite as deeply as could a woman equally wonderful as yourself. O, if quantity and quality of love might make lasting happiness! In the very moment of acknowledging my fear of marrying you, there rushes an overwhelming desire to know again the rapture of your dear arms about me, and I know that death alone shall prevent me from becoming your wife.

We have looked into each other's eyes, and read sacred things, and I am not strong enough to turn away, though a thousand things should seem to make it best.

I can only pray that you will come safely back to me as speedily as is possible, and hope to keep pace with you through the long happy years which stretch ahead.

I am counting the days until you wire me when I may meet you. Until then I am Your loving MARY.

EFFECT OF SPACIOUSNESS.

DWELLERS in the crowded parts of a great city are prone to forget that, after all, they form but a minor fraction of the people of the nation. Suburbs, smaller towns, villages, and the countryside still contain a majority of the population, and in all these places there is abundance of room, if one knows how to use it. Moreover, the tendency of the day is to spread cities over wider and wider areas, with more and more room to the family, and there are thousands of home builders who like their houses to express this feeling of roominess.

The wide flung porches of this house accomplish that end in admirable fashion. The pergola at the side entrance helps the same effect, and the fitting of the house to its out of doors, which everyone desires, can be made perfect with a design of this sort.

There are other things which help this house to fit into the landscape. It is built of common brick, which is always a local product, and has—no one knows just why—that curious affinity for the soil which goes with local products. This choice of materials permits and invites the close planting of shrubs and vines.

There is almost nothing about the house to rot or burn. The walls are of burned clay, as stated. The roof is of asphalt or metal shingles. The interior plaster is gypsum, applied to metal lath. Designed to build out fire and weather, the specifications very nearly build out time as well, and encourage that close union of house and garden which adds so much to the home feeling.

One can go directly from the front porch to the living room, but the formal entry is by way of the pergola at the side. The entrance hall contains the stairs to the upper floor, with a fine coat closet under them. Leaving the stairs at the right, you enter the living room, which extends clear across the front of the house.

This is a room 24 feet long by 14½ feet wide. At the end opposite the porch is the fireplace, with high windows flanking the chimney. A French door leads to the front porch, a group of three windows looks out on the side porch, and a similar group is in the long wall of the room near the fireplace. Evidently the family gathered here will not lack for either light or ventilation.

At the left of the fireplace is the entrance to the dining room, 15 feet by 16. This room projects slightly from the main line of the house and is lighted by another triple group of windows. Back of the dining room is a double pantry: a butler's pantry, through which you reach the kitchen, and a storage place at the side, opening from the kitchen alone.

The kitchen itself is 12 feet square, is lighted from two sides, and is entered from a service porch at the rear.

Across the hall from the kitchen is a fine bedroom, 13 feet 9 inches by 13 feet. This room, with windows on three sides, has splendid cross ventilation, and is equipped with a large closet at the end of the hall next to the bedroom.

Upstairs are three bedrooms, the smallest of which is 12 by 13 feet. All of them are provided with ample closets, and two have cross ventilation.

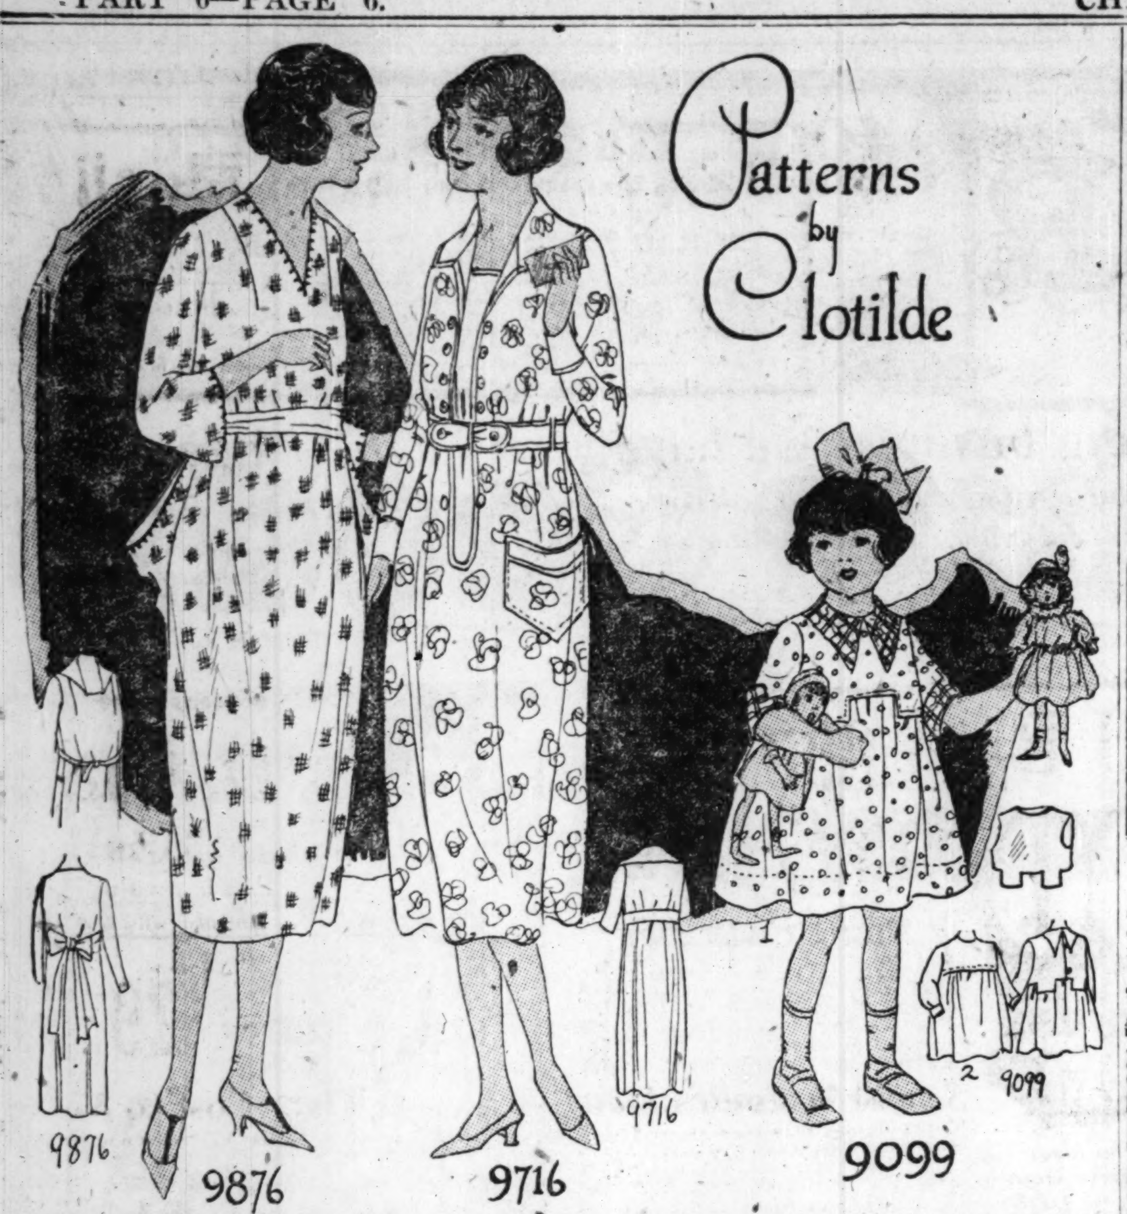
Patterns by Clotilde



9876—Woman's one piece dress. Sizes 36 to 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3½ yards of 44 inch material, or 2½ yards of 54 inch.

9716—Woman's one piece house dress. Sizes 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards of 36 inch material, with ⅝ yard of 36 inch contrasting. The lower edge measures 1⅜ yards.

9099—Child's dress. Sizes 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10 years. Size 4 requires 1⅞ yards of 36 inch material, with ⅜ yard of 36 inch contrasting and ⅜ yard of lining.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

ABOUT as simple in design as can be, but nevertheless smart, is No. 9876. It will lend itself to almost any desired material. It is ideal to wear under a long coat, and equally pretty to wear on any informal occasion—the material chosen naturally deciding the most appropriate times for wearing it.

For home wear satin, taffeta, or crêpe de chine will make up prettily, and for street wear under a winter coat, serge or any of the lovely woolen materials shown on the counters of all the stores. Black is much in favor just now, and, while it is sometimes combined with a color one sees all black dresses and many that show some white in their makeup.

The pattern is not divided at the waistline, but the pieces are cut in one length for neck to hem. It is intended to be slipped on over the head, and the shoulder seams are left open part way on both shoulders for that purpose.

Slipping a dress on over the head means that one doesn't have to bother with that troublesome part of making a dress—the closing down the front or back. But the finishing of the shoulder seams is an important part of the making. It is not necessarily hard, but the work must be accurately and neatly done.

The pockets may be left out if one chooses, and the sleeves made long or any degree of shortness that one may wish. Pockets and sash will make for attractiveness, and bead or other embroidery will make the smartest trimming; a band around the top of each pocket, some small motif on the sash ends, and something as a neck finish.

If one cared to spend the time, embroidery around the bottom of the skirt adds wonderfully. And in many of the embroidery transfer designs sold one can get more than one width of the same pattern, which comes in well when trimming places like the tops of these pockets.

No. 9716 is a pretty dress and not difficult to make. It will be suitable for any material and will not need much in the way of trimming. If made of gingham or other wash material it would be good looking to make the vest of white pique—choosing a fine quality. The vest can be lined with thin muslin, and will hold its shape perfectly, especially if both pique and muslin are well shrunken before making up.

It wouldn't be a bad idea to work eyelets on each side of the front of the dress, starting at the point on each side where the top of the vest comes, and working them one inch apart the length of the opening. Then lace the dress together over the vest with bébé ribbon, matching in color the most prominent color in the material.

The child's dress, No. 9099, is an especially good design for challis, taffeta, serge, or other similar materials, and no matter what the season of the year, a dress with a little warmth is sometimes necessary, although many children never wear any but wash clothes, both because of their attractiveness and the warmth of most homes.

This pattern shows a straight, one piece gathered skirt sewed to a little underblouse, and the overblouse is made separately.

If the sleeves are sewed into the armholes of the underblouse it will be pretty to finish the armholes of the overblouse with a bias piping. After this is basted in a seam around the armhole, baste a shaped facing of the dress material about the armhole, and after the piping and facing are stitched to the armhole, clip the edge of the seam all around the armhole. Then baste the facing down over the seam, and hem in place invisibly.

The edges of the tabs around the bottom of the waist should be bound or finished the same as the armholes.

Never Invited Again.

While I was at boarding school, a friend of mine was to be married in an adjoining town, and I was to be a bridesmaid. One day in the same mail I received an invitation from her married sister and one from a friend of my mother's to visit in their respective houses during the festivities. If my friend's sister had not invited me I should have accepted the invitation from my mother's friend with great joy and alacrity, and I wrote my friend's sister to that effect, dilating upon how much more fun it would be to visit her, and I wrote thanking my mother's friend and declining.

In two days' time I received again in the same mail letters from the same two. On opening them I discovered that each inclosed my letter to the other person with appropriate comments! I had addressed both envelopes at the same time and slipped in the letters without paying any attention. My punishment was in never being invited to my mother's friend's house again. K. E.

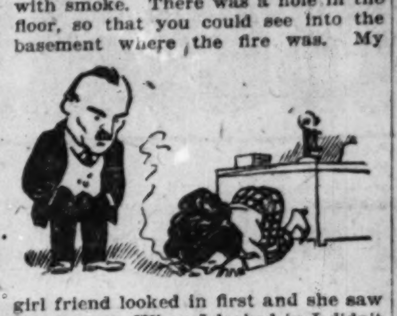
The New Parson Calls.

It was the new parson's first call. I had just washed my hair, so was by no means able to present myself. To facilitate matters, I stepped into the bedroom and sent my younger sister to the door to say she regretted I wasn't in.

After visiting with her in the sitting room a short while, the parson arose to leave. By mistake he opened the wrong door, one near the hall door but which led into the room where I sat. Imagine my embarrassment. MRS. J. B.

The Boss Was There.

I have been working for a large firm, and one day the place got filled with smoke. There was a hole in the floor, so that you could see into the basement where the fire was. My girl friend looked in first and she saw the flames. When I looked in I didn't see anything on account of the smoke, so I exclaimed, "O, you're dreaming; I don't see anything."



Not receiving a reply, I looked up and inquired; "Did you lose your voice?"

To my embarrassment, the owner of the firm replied, "No, I still have my voice." S. K.

57th January fur clearing—reductions up to 40%

We take but one reduction—and that now—on our entire stock of winter furs. You can buy furs here in January for as little as you can next March. Because of the backward season, and the unusual number of furs remaining in our stock, we quote larger reductions than in any prior year. All the furs are of selected skins, and were made up with the utmost care by highly skilled furriers devoting to every garment all the time required to produce a masterpiece of its class. The models are of the highest distinction, and assured a prolonged vogue. Fur salon, fifth

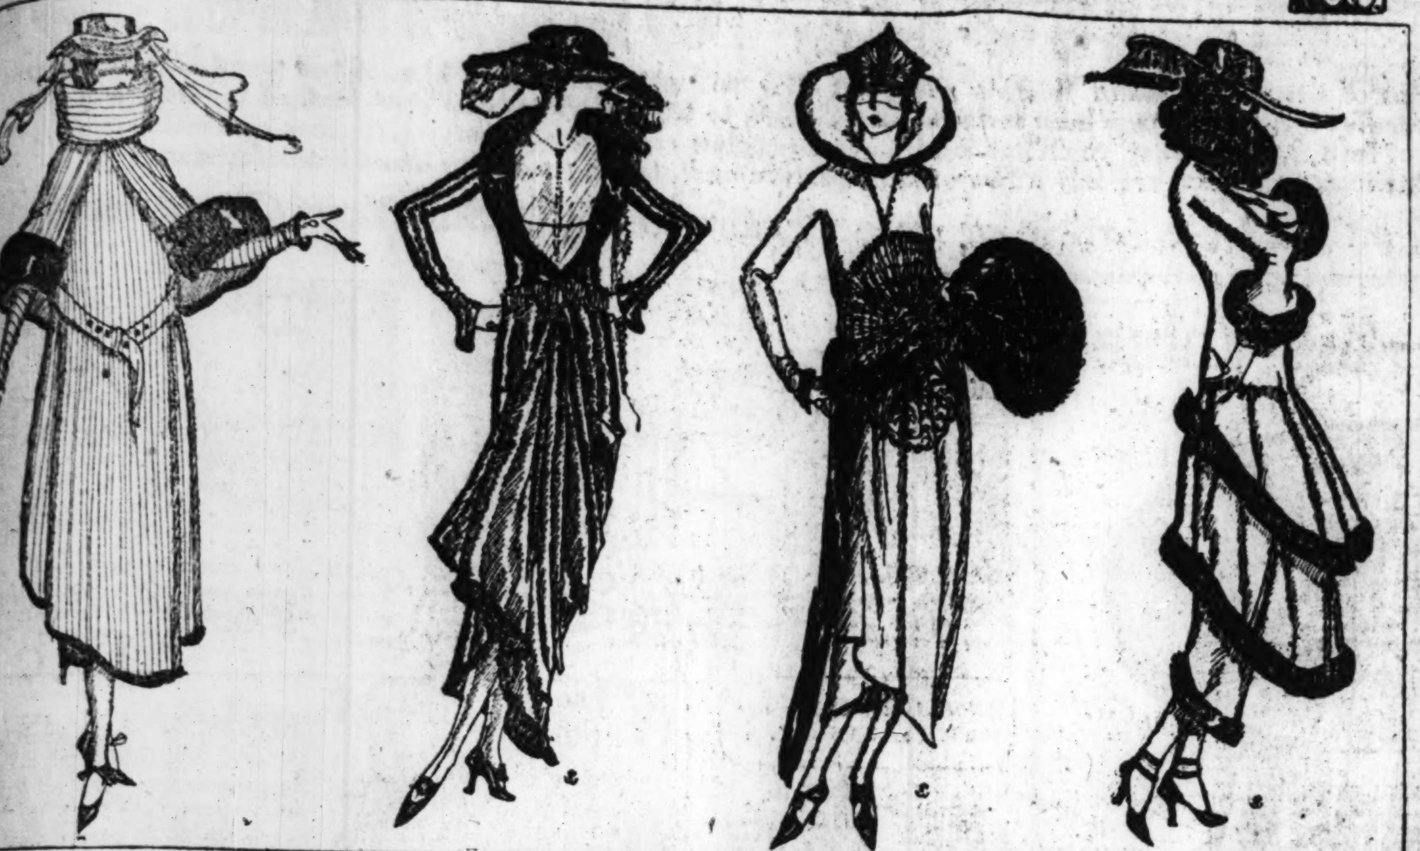
The Last Word in Paris Fashions



velour motor coat trimmed with seal skin.

Dinner dress of cloth of silver, draped and held in place by silver belt.

Afternoon dress of two shades of gray duvetyn; brown fur sash.

Tailored dress of natural camel's hair, trimmed in skunk.

DECLINE OF THE CAPE.

By Mary Brush Williams.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS.—[Special Correspondence.]—A woman breezed into a smart salon the other afternoon with the announcement that all of other fur coat were being made. The thought naturally suggested itself as to why on earth she sent the one she was wearing well—why discriminate against it, why not give it a chance in life as well as her dozen or so of others. She is the woman who bought a lease off of somebody's hands on the Avenue du Bois du Boulogne for a hundred thousand francs.

But do let me stick to my subject. The coat she had on was of white fur, and it made her look something the shape of our planet as it rolls on its axis – certainly proportionately wider round the waist line.

This brings me to the point; it a fashion item for next winter. In having your fur coat made over, borrow the motorman's as a model—be sure to get the motorman's who wears his lapping over in front, double breasted, and, of course, don't have any buttons on the side that do not fasten.

They say that news looking too far into the future is as uninteresting as news too long dead, but this has an immediate value as well. You can make your spring coat along the same lines. Make it straight and make it long and with kimono sleeves, and don't always fasten it but hold it where the fasteners are.

Meantime here is a motor coat along slightly different lines that might get you through the spring and summer. It is of purplish brown velour, striped in a darker shade. It is finished round the neck with a great roll collar, beneath which flows a cape to the waist line.

Cape, sleeves, and bottom of coat are banded in sealskin. A narrow edging of it goes round the tight sleeves and the irregular hem, while the band round the cape is some six inches wide.

Please note the item that the coat is a good deal higher on one side than the other. The motoring hat which accompanies it is the old tri-cornered shape that we used to employ for horseback riding. It is of beige felt, wonderfully soft, and edged with a tiny piping of satin. A veil drops over the eyes in front and floats away into two trains, so to speak, on the sides.

The second model seems to me an appropriate one for vampiring it in the cellar of the Brevoort hotel, New York, or perhaps in the College Inn, Chicago. For those wishing to get up such a costume in the house it is of silver tissue, hiked up in front, or, as the artist would say "amusingly draped." The "hike" is held in place with what I should call a cartridge belt, if only these for everyday use were of silver and studded with pearls, as is this one.

The long V neck line is edged with skunk. Tiny points of the same fur trim the long sleeves. The area between the sides of the V is covered by a "modestie" of tulle edged with seed pearls and held in place at the neck by an emerald.

The picturesque person here showing the costume wears a black panne velvet hat of large proportions. Evidently the black chantilly veil is still chic, and dear knows it does soften the face. This one falls to the waistline on one side only. It goes like a cataract in pointed folds. Dripping pearl earrings, to quote what the artist has to say about it, give a "harmonious catchet to the ensemble."

The third offering is an afternoon frock of two shades of gray duvetyn, the lining of the rufflike collar being of the darker shade, as is the embroidered peacock pattern across the front of bodice and skirt. Lights of silver and dull red show in the embroidery.

The distinguishing item about this costume is the sash. It is of fur, and brown in color. It cuts across the peacock embroidery and ties loosely over one hip. Tiny brown buttons and loops outline the V neck.

A fashion expert tells me that the Russian hat is of Egyptian blue that completes this simple costuming. It is embroidered in silver and has a tiny gray tulle "loup" or masque veil going over the eyes. The shoes are of brown satin with buckles of emeralds.

The fourth lady must be one of those tall English girls. The artist insists that he always draws people exactly as he sees them. Anyway, her costume is a little more practical than the foregoing offerings and that is something. It is of natural camel's hair and looks as if it had been wound about her. As a matter of fact, a skunk trimming has been wound about the full flounces of the skirt.

The costume is really a tailored dress —not a coat and skirt. It is long waisted and has the proper accompaniment of tight sleeves flaring into bell shape. They and the double ruched collar are edged with skunk.

The big hat is of tarnished gold material, trimmed with a bias piece of the "goods" put on in what somebody says is a "chic direction" under the brim.

Bright Sayings of the Children

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

After much persuasion and assurance that there was nothing "sissy" looking about the coat his mother had "made over" from sister's, Billy consented to wear it to kindergarten. No sooner had he arrived in the school dressing room when a classmate loudly shouted: "O, Bill, where'd you get the girl's coat?"

This so enraged and mortified Billy that he fairly flew at his tormentor and proceeded to knock him about with his fists until the teacher came running in and separated the youngsters. Billy then jerked off the offending coat and threw it down on the floor and tramped on it. The teacher made him pick it up and explain his conduct, whereupon he replied: "He said it was a girl's coat, so I won't put it on any more!"

The teacher finally succeeded in soothing him, telling him the coat was a nice one and manly looking. Pacified and grateful for her words Billy looked up with a triumphant look and exclaimed:

"Awright! Now, you hold my coat while I give that kid another crack in the jaw!" E. T. C.

Winnifred was seeing her baby brother for the first time. She gazed fondly at the little red face peeping out from the blankets, then looking up at the nurse she asked eagerly, "Can I hug he, or hasn't he got a neck?" C. C.

Brother John had drawn a picture of an airplane and being proud of his work went to the different members of the family for a word of praise. Harry looked at it a moment, then said: "Pretty good for a kid your age."

J. F. J.

Alice was allowed to remain up one night till 9 o'clock as there were guests. When grandma said: "My goodness, child, it is 9 o'clock and you're up yet," Alice answered: "Dat clock is fast." M. L. H.

My young brother Joe was calling one day while my husband was doing some housework for me. The following day, when being told that the stork had left us a big baby girl, he said: "Well, it's a good thing it's a girl. Now John will have a helper." J. G. R.

Frankie received an old watch from his dad and wound it every few minutes. His mother told him he mustn't wind it more than once a day or he would break it.

He said, "All right, now it's wound for today."

In a little while his mother caught him again winding the watch, and he said, "That's all right, mother; I'm winding it for tomorrow." Mrs. H. S.

Charles, who is just crazy about an electric train and tracks, when asked by Santa Claus what he should bring him for Christmas said, "One of them trains that runs all around the world without stopping." B. T.

"Mother," said Sammie, "where is you?"

Being in a rear room of the house, I said: "Child, what are you saying?" He said: "Well, where am you?"

I remarked, "Child, my child, listen to your words."

In the meantime he had reached the room I was in, so he said: "It's all right now. I've got you." S. F. C.

A small girl was invited by her aunt to go downtown and see the Christmas toys.

When she got home her mother said: "Well, dear, did you see all the pretty toys?"

Margaret replied in disgust: "Naw, I didn't see nuffin by stummicks 'n' legs." H. J. C.

Are You Among the 85%?

Figures show that 85% of American women have some form of foot trouble as a result of wearing badly-designed or badly-fitted shoes. Do YOU suffer from fallen arches, from muscle strain, from an aching back, jumpy nerves, irritability, or one of the many forms of nervous illness that come from poor carriage and a misadjustment of your weight in walking? Then you should change to Cantilever shoes; they prevent and correct all foot troubles.

Cantilevers have a natural sole line that allows the foot to lie in its normal position without distortion. The weight is properly distributed; there is no undue strain on the arch nor on any cord or muscle.

The under-arch sole draws up, as the shoe is laced, to hug the foot and provide flexible support to the arch. And the shank FLEXES with every step. The muscles exercise freely in a shoe of this type, and grow strong from use.

Cantilevers are trim and well made and very comfortable. Widths from AAAAA to EE. Write for booklet.

THE TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

MANNERS AND MENUS.

A SUPREME authority on manners once wrote: "At family dinners, where the common household bread is used, it should never be cut less than an inch thick. There is nothing more plebeian than thin bread at dinner."

And if sliced bread, instead of the popular roll of the present day, is used for dinner, this item of behavior is still valid. It is counted correct to cut small pieces from the large piece as it rests on the bread and butter plate, and to butter only one bit at a time.

To butter a whole slice of bread at a time, and raise the whole to the mouth, may be tolerated in the nursery, where there are many to be waited upon, but it is only the poor children of the sidewalks that are given concoctions of bread as wide as their faces and much thicker than the give of their mouths opened to the widest.

The small piece of bread, the crouton for the soup, the bread and butter plate, have all worked to banish from use the plebeian crumb brush. It is more agreeable to just ordinary good taste not to be surrounded with a crumbed up table.

Moreover, when the table is covered with crumbs the floor is likely to be also, and it is neither good manners nor good sense to leave a table or a dining room floor looking as though the chickens ought to be called in. Because of crumbs too freely scattered, there are men in cheap restaurants who go around with a broom and brush, while people are eating, an unhygienic thing as well as a thing hateful to anybody of taste.

Manners Based on Common Sense.

On the questions of manners and etiquette pertaining to the presentation of bread at table much could be said, and a man does not necessarily need to know anything of the most ordinary amenities of life to have a bread code. Table manners undoubtedly began around something as simple.

Not many years ago I was standing at the door of as crude a home in the country as one would be likely to find anywhere, when one of the men at the dinner table took his sister to task in no measured or pleasant terms because the bread plate was empty. He made it evident that he was teaching her manners, although each and every custom of polite society was violated by his speech, and by the way the bread was served—in enormous slabs, buttered with wide strokes of the knife, covered to its very hilt, and then the whole slice raised to the mouth.

Some code of manners we are bound to have, whatever our lot in life, and with reason. There are good and practical reasons for almost every item in the simple codes of table manners, based on good common sense and often upon dietetic decency. To take a great mouthful of bread is dietetically indecent, as well as actually vulgar.

No end of facts obtained by years of observation could be compiled illustrative of how rude people can be with a slice of bread, and ruder yet with two slices put together in a sandwich. But if we are to talk about table manners we cannot spend so much time on one item of the menu.

Good Breeding Manifest at Table.

Perhaps we have imagined that it was democratic scorn that has led us to an intermission of practices in the true amenities of life, that are just as surely conveniences of behavior as they are good manners. Some of these conveniences have been foolishly labeled etiquette, and so have been despised by common, sensible people. But even the practice of a set etiquette may really forward some of the business of living.

We may have intermitted practices in good behavior, but we have not ceased to admire and desire the character bred only by such practices, when sincere. Thousands of homes today have all the facilities in the way of money and power to command, but none of the felicities that would forward their desires for the higher accompaniments of privilege.

There is no question but that the sum of good breeding is most manifest at table, and table manners begin before the dining room is reached. In well conducted homes people proceed to and leave the table according to certain precedents. We find in this fact one proof that good manners are the pleasantest and most suitable compliments to age, position or hospitality. As to hospitality, another word of a sort for manners, it has been counted a virtue since Abraham founded a race and religion, and to violate some of its codes constitutes the worst of manners.

Prevent Elbow Collisions.

Do we need to say that good manners are not the mere ceremonious conventions some people seem to think they are, and nothing else? As far as table manners are concerned, there is not one item of a reasonable code that has not an eminently practical base.

Shall we proceed to the table higgledy-piggledy with time wasting clumsinesses? Shall we pull out our chair and sit down instantly? Good custom says we shall await the signal of the hostess or mother. And good sense ought to lead us to consider our relation to other people.

Instinctively most people will stand to the left of their chairs. Practically this prevents much confusion in getting seated. The alert hostess may lead a whole table to standing on the other side of the chair when she sees that an unsophisticated person has done so. Hostesses do such things.

If we are thus systematic in our getting seated, and regardful to prevent elbow smashings, we need to be no less so when we are seated. A child is taught how to handle his spoon so as not to collide with his neighbor, and a man should handle his knife and fork with the same idea. But on the subject of the modern ill mannered elbow a whole monograph could be written.

The hostess should have the chairs so placed at the table as to allow for elbow room, and ample space between shoulder and shoulder, when food is served from behind, as it were. The wider the chair the narrower the space may be. Six inches is about the least allowable for quite wide chairs.

Elbows Off the Table.

Perhaps the soup is the first object of attention, but relishes are popular. Watching behavior in public dining rooms today one might judge that holding the glass or fork or spoon or roll or olive or some other tidbit in the fingers as high as and opposite the mouth between bites and services was the proper thing to do. There are common sense and dietetic reasons to condemn this practice, were the appearance lovely. Besides it violates one of the most commonplace canons of table manners which says: "Elbows off the table."

And now the soup awaits our attention. The noiseless soup spoon has not yet been invented, say the joke mongers, who have obtained an enormous capital out of bad table manners.

The baby should be taught to make his supping a noiseless performance, and the utterly tabooed blowing to cool soup will never be even thought to be necessary if the soup spoon is dipped into the soup at the side farthest away from the person—the far edge of the spoon also. The edge of the spoon next the mouth is not as hot as the other edge, and the dipped edge being the higher when the spoon is put to the mouth, there is a less likelihood of a drop falling on the shirt front or coat lapel.

We are neater today than many an old fashioned man of much manners, but with a bad hand with the soup spoon. We hardly need the warning of despised etiquette that we should take soup from the side of the spoon, so that we will not put that instrument too far into our mouths, as when taking some disagreeable medicine.

Using the Fork.

As to the fork, how can we say enough about its wrong and right use in a brief space! A teacher puts the matter thus: "It is not good form in cutting meat to hold the fork in an upright position, grasping it around the middle of the handle by the fingers. Perhaps the reason for this is that it is not nearly so secure a hold as by the other method."

It may not be out of place to mention that America's real capacity and political adroitness was disastrously underestimated by a certain European nation not long ago because an American ambassador, though possessed of millions, was a wild wielder of the table fork. Moreover, he was one to recall discussion about the invention of the noiseless soup spoon.

But perhaps it is not worth while to tell of all the ridiculous things that may happen when the fork is held awkwardly and annoyingly. Even when handled correctly it should not be rushed to the mouth often. Men who can make millions often think it a thrifty thing to cut up all their meat before they begin to eat, but even dietetic practice comes to the aid of etiquette here, and says that there is or should be ample time between mouthfuls to prepare the next in order.

It would be an unusual thing today to see a man lay his knife and fork on the cloth while he passed his plate for a second helping instead of leaving them securely set on it, since there is really no other place for them. But not a few people leave the knife and fork carelessly disposed when they leave the table, just as they crumple the napkin instead of folding it partly, at least along the center folds, but never on all folds.

Good Manners Make for Comfort.

Good manners are mainly system in society. In a large sense the whole human race is society. We count it good practice to keep to the right, and those who keep to the left are guilty of bad manners as well as bad practice. Good manners is good system in behavior. System is always labor saving, and we need to look to our manners in this modern day for that reason.

Good manners make for comfort. If you sit next to a man who leaves his teaspoon in his cup you feel uncomfortable because you are at any time likely to get a small but unagreeable shower of tea. The many rough methods of characterizing bad manners today is certain enough proof that good manners are always in the background waiting for attention.

For and By BUSINESS GIRLS

By Loretta King.

Miss King will be glad to help business girls solve their problems. If you want a personal answer send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Miss Loretta King, The Tribune, Chicago.

DOING SMALL TASKS WELL.

WE started to compare, the other day at luncheon, the spirit manifested during this holiday season to the spirit of former Christmases. Gradually, however, our reminiscences led us away from our original topic until we found ourselves exchanging experiences of our first days in the business world.

We laughed over the ludicrous mistakes we had made. We were amused at the recollection of the awe in which we had held our first "boss," and our y of any one who had had a longer perience than ourselves. We sighed r our early trials and difficulties. we recounted with pride the incidents that finally brought us recognition; the things that gave us our first ization of ambition.

It is surprising how seemingly triv some of these incidents were—nota the one in Ann's case. But, as herself has said, it is the ability appreciate the importance of the things and to do them as well she is able that makes the business capable of being intrusted with big ones.

Ann has worked, perhaps, longer any of the other girls in our up, and her business experience been an inspiration to all of us, spite of the fact that she has one ure marked against her score. But tell you about that some other e. Here is the story she told us other day in her own words as rly as I can remember them:

"When I first came to work for present firm I was just one of the s in a big general office. I got g fairly well, but there were times en it seemed perfectly hopeless that would ever be signaled out from so y for promotion.

"One day, after I had been working for the firm a couple of months and was beginning to feel at ease there, Mr. Andrews—the head of the firm—walked into the office as we were getting ready to go out for lunch. He spoke to one of the girls nearest the door:

"'I want to get an N. W. timetable. Are you going in the direction of the railroad ticket office?'

"Greatly to Mr. Andrews' surprise and annoyance, judging by his expression, the girl said coolly, 'No, I'm not going over that way,' and she gathered up her gloves and purse and walked out of the office.

"I suppose if Mr. Andrews had said to her—as nine out of ten men in his position would have said—'Please go over to the ticket office and bring back a time table to me,' she would have gone off to do his bidding without a thought of demurring.

"After a glance of amazement at the girl as she walked out, he turned and looked expectantly at one or two of the other girls, who evidently hadn't recovered sufficiently from their astonishment to volunteer their services. Before he had a chance to look at me I said I was going out in the direction of the ticket office and would bring back a time-table with me. He smiled and thanked me. I hadn't intended going in that direction until a moment before I spoke, but I knew that it wouldn't take more than ten minutes to do the errand.

"I forgot all about this incident, even when a few weeks after it happened I was given a small promotion. I never would have connected the two events except that the office manager in making the change told me it was done at Mr. Andrews' suggestion.

"Two years later, when Mr. Andrews' secretary married and I was given the job, he recalled the occurrence to me and said that was what made him interested in my progress. When he needed a secretary and learned that I had done good work during my two years with the firm he decided to give me a chance at the position. Well, you all know I've been with him ever since and that I've advanced in my small way in proportion as he and the firm have advanced."

That's Ann's story. There's nothing much to it, is there? Just a cheerful and spontaneous response to a call for a small service. An appreciation of the importance of the little things—that is Ann's business creed—and its practice has brought her an enviable degree of success.

REAL LOVE STORIES

Do you know a real love story—one that stranger than fiction? It is the idea at is wanted. No attention will be paid literary style. The Tribune will pay for every story published. No manuripts returned. Address Doris Blake, e Tribune, Chicago.

ALL MUSSED UP.

HE was a senior in college—also laboratory assistant in chemistry—and she was a senior in the preparatory department of e college, also a member of the chemry class over which he had charge laboratory days.

He was grave, dignified, serious; she as an irresponsible fun-loving fly bit of femininity, the trial and ment of her college sophomore sis who divided her time between the suit of knowledge and trying to p the younger sister out of mischief. Some three or four weeks of the hool year had passed. The grave nior had extricated the irresponsible e from various mishaps incident to fortunate experiments in the laboray, and she had looked at him grately and with awe-inspired eyes—at time—and later confided to her er that he had treated her just as if didn't know anything!

But school days grew irksome, and day four kindred spirits forsook college dormitory halls without rembering the existence of the preceptress, and followed the call of the open. Some half mile from the college a ditch tunnel was under construction. What fun it would be, suggested the irresponsible one, to start at one end and go through to the other. No sooner said than done, and four maidens, immaculate at the beginning of their journey, emerged from the ditch a sight to behold, for most of the way the roof was not more than three feet high and only a foot wide.

The journey had consumed more time than they had imagined it would, and when they had reached the end of the tunnel and looked at watches, the fact broke upon them that this was laboratory day in the chemistry class. Four frightened girls rushed home, to find that they had only one minute to spare. The irresponsible one dashed to her room, met the horror-stricken eyes of her sister and, without vouchsafing any explanation to her urgent queries, brushed off as much dirt as possible and made a wild break for the laboratory.

That evening as they were getting ready for bed, the irresponsible one confided to her sister that he, meaning the grave senior, had invited her, right after laboratory class, to attend the concert in town the coming week.

All her sense of propriety outraged the college sister demanded: "Do you mean to say that he didn't have better sense than to ask you to go anywhere with him after the spectacle you made of yourself this afternoon?"

A year later the irresponsible one as the wife of the grave senior—now a promising young instructor—demanded to know when was the first he had known he loved her, and he with a twinkle in his eye had replied: "When you came to laboratory that day looking as if you had been making mud pies."

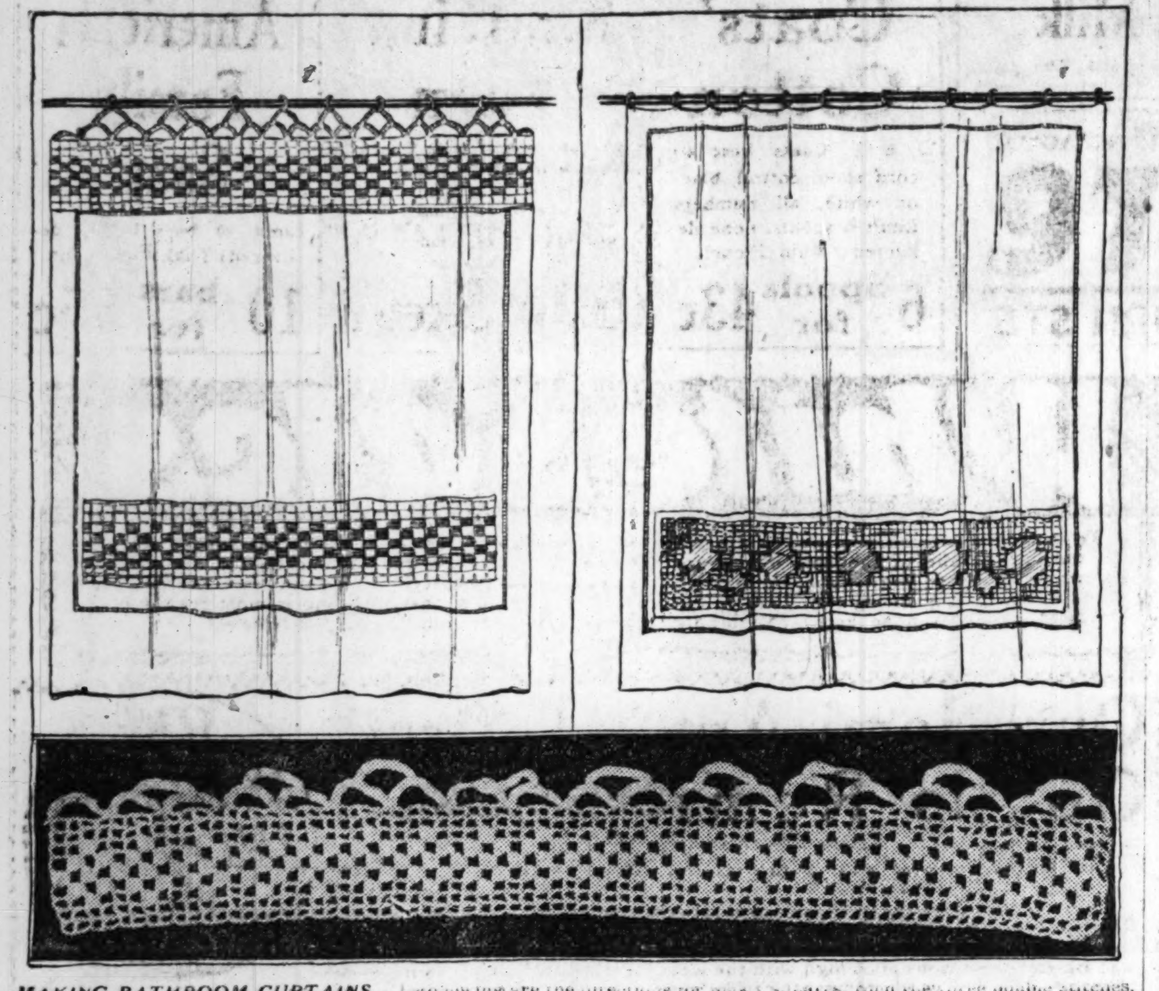
Practical and Fancy Needlework

BY CLOTILDE



MAKING BATHROOM CURTAINS.

MOST women like to have some fancy work on hand that can be worked on at odd moments, and something new and attractive for the home is always in demand.

Bathroom curtains hanging on a rod from the middle of the window are not new but are, nevertheless, good looking. A rather heavy art linen will look well (something that cannot be seen through), and then insertion and edging are set in, like the illustration.

A wide hem is laid across the bottom and a narrower one up each side, and these are hemstitched. Then the insertion is set in above this, or, if you prefer, you can simply use an edging.

The same design is used across the top, only finished in points, which serve as points to sew the rings to. As to the size or kind of rod and rings used, each person can consult her own taste.

Following are the directions for making the lace shown in the picture: The crochet cotton used should, of course, be the right weight to go with the curtain material.

Make a chain of thirty stitches, then five more, and turn to go back on the chain just made. Then make a double crochet stitch and put your needle into the third stitch from the end. This will make one of those little squares.

Now for the rest of it: Make a chain of two stitches, then a double crochet, putting the needle into the third chain, and so on. Every double crochet stitch should leave two stitches in between. After four squares have been made, make three double crochets together, putting each one into one of the first chains made. Then four more squares back, making a double stitch to form the square.

In this second row three squares are made, then the three double crochet stitches, then one square, then three double stitches, and then three more squares. The next row has two squares, then the three double stitches, then one square, then the three double stitches, one square, three double stitches, and then two squares.

The following row goes back to the two squares and the next row to one square. This completes the figure, and one keeps on repeating indefinitely, going from one to three of the groups of three double crochet stitches, and back again to one double crochet stitch.

If this is to be used as an edging, finish the row. Always at the end make a chain of five, then turn and go a little openwork finish may be added after the insertion part is finished. Start at one end at what is to be the bottom and make a chain of thirteen or fifteen. Put the needle into the beginning of the fourth row, and continue making these looping chains across the bottom, then turn back and cover each one of these loops with the single crochet stitch. A second row may be added, making these chains come from the center of each of the first loops.

Once, 'twas the land of hidden treasure—but, TODAY, the glorious treasurehouse of the

is open wide to all

NOT the piratic hoards of ancient Spanish days, but an unlimited wealth of golden sunshine and sapphire skies. The green lawns have an emerald sheen, and flowers, like rubies, smile at you everywhere. That most precious gift of all, good health, is in the air you breathe, filling you with a new strength and purpose.

And it is today, when the grip of winter seems everywhere, and when just a glimpse of sunshine would be most welcome, that the summer time joys of the Florida East Coast are at their best and brightest. Every known form of outdoor pleasuring may be pursued under perfect climatic conditions. You can golf on the best links in the country, motor over the finest of roads or the hardest beach speedways in the world. You can fish in the deep sea or in the placid inland waterways. You can sail or run your motor boat in ideal water. You can plunge in the surf or drink tea under the palm trees' shade. In short, all the East Coast is a pleasant park, and every resort is a center of perpetual enjoyment.

Do You Know that in an Alaska the circulation is so perfect and the air so dry that you can place matches and a crock of salt side by side in the provision chamber close up under the ice and both the salt and the matches will remain bone dry.

This perfect circulation plus the "cubed" cork and "confined" air WALLS, the most perfect refrigerator insulator known, make the Alaska incomparable as a food preserver and ice saver. Ask your dealer for a demonstration.

For the Best—Buy a Seven-Wall Cork Insulated Alaska

Save Food and Ice with an Alaska

Everything that goes into an Alaska Cork Insulated Refrigerator stays there just as you put it in—as fresh, wholesome and unspoiled as the day delivered. No refrigerator keeps its contents in a higher state of preservation. None chills its contents more perfectly or with greater uniformity.

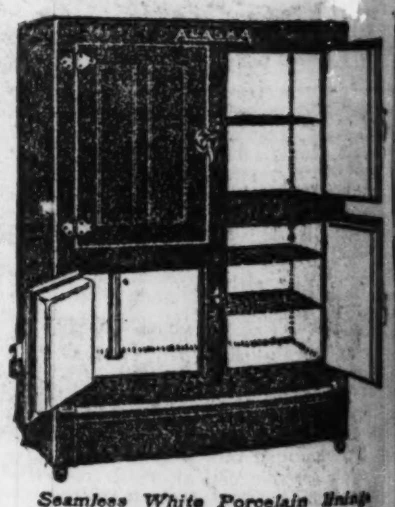
But what makes the Alaska loom up over all others is its matchless ice-saving. Owners claim that it requires less ice, and is hence more economically operated, than any other refrigerator on the market.

Alaska economy is due to the scientific construction of the Alaska walls, of "cubed" cork and "confined" air, the most perfect refrigerator insulation known to science—and it helps to explain the great popularity of the Alaska, millions of which are now in use.

Yet, in spite of its marked superiority, the Alaska costs you no more than many refrigerators of lesser quality. The saving effected by daily use is therefore clear.

See an Alaska demonstrated. All sizes—all prices. Splendidly constructed and fully guaranteed. Made with seamless round-cornered Porcelain; or with White Enamel linings. Durable, sanitary, easy to clean, incomparable.

Send for attractive booklet showing the many convenient sizes.



Seamless White Porcelain linings with highly glazed surface and round corners, or sanitary White Enamel linings make Alaskas easy to keep sweet, clean and immaculate.

The food compartments are practically odorless and because of the wonderful dryness of the cold circulating air, they can be kept so with a minimum of cleansing effort.

The Theaters

By Percy Hammond.

MR. ZIEGFELD writes again from Hastings-on-Hudson to say that the Follies is now as bashful as an ingenue at a strawberry festival, and that THE TRIBUNE's critic may attack it without fear of having his austere jowls incarnadined by the red symbol of an outraged propriety. Mr. Ziegfeld says that the innocence of a joke exists in the manner of its performance. He did not see, he says, Mr. W. C. Fields illustrate the humorous moments to which THE TRIBUNE objected, but he took THE TRIBUNE's word for it, and by telephone banished Mr. Fields in favor of Mr. Bernard Granville.

As I recall the perturbing episode it was not Mr. Fields who was so much in error, but Miss Ray Dooley, whose frantic efforts to please led her into mammalian and other organic indiscretions, realistic, no doubt, but too fundamental to cheer the less primitive of those present.

A heavy correspondence on the subject of the Follies indicts me for a specious prudery and as a spoil-sport. Also as a too timorous crusader against the incredible vulgarity of the Broadway morons who continue for us our theatrical entertainment. Men write to me that after my assurance that the Follies was bold and beautiful and that it had been cleaned up they went to it with their young daughters, and were sorry that they did so, because they thought it had not been cleansed enough in its only disgusting moment. They believe with me that Mr. Ziegfeld sullies his incomparable spectacle with a minute or two of useless ugliness, and that he would be just as popular if he omitted that shabby interlude, even if he had to add a pretty naked woman or two. I suspect that many men who are addicted to smutty stories prefer not to have them told to their women friends by strange actors in public. That is to say, I believe that if Mr. Fields or Miss Dooley ventured elsewhere to go into such realist details as those in their scene in the Follies they would be greeted with an ominous silence, and be asked to take the air. Mr. Ziegfeld is the supershowman. Therefore, when I tell him, as I have told him before, that he is good at naked women, but bad at naked jokes, he knows that I am wrong. The public has told him so. Still, I shall continue to believe that the undressed girls in his beautiful tableau, "The Love Boat," for instance, are a sophisticated, inoffensive, daring and artistic staff of metropolitan revue; while his meddling with the unpleasant truck of this baby scene is a cheap bending of the knee to the hick degeneracy that is believed to be predominant in the reuben audiences at metropolitan plays. Do you enjoy seeing alcoholic milk from a rubber nipple smeared all over and around the thin lips of the adult and none too comely visage of Miss Ray Dooley, made up as a puling infant? Do you care to see her angrily unfasten the comedian's coat and waistcoat? But of course you do. However, in case you don't, will you amiably refrain from writing me unpleasant letters, claiming that I have not warned you? "The Follies" is the best and the greatest of the revues. It is, therefore, too bad that it has its nasty spot.

The week's promises:

At the Illinois—Joseph Cawthorn in "The Half Moon," an entertainment with a libretto by William Le Baron and music by Victor Jacobi. Among the contents of the cast are Oscar Shaw, Miss Marie Flynn, Miss May Thompson, and Miss Maude Eburne. Tomorrow night.

At the Studebaker—Miss Irene Bordoni in an adaptation from the French called "As You Were." Miss Bordoni in this engagement is ex-Sam Bernard, her erstwhile associate, but Al Shean takes his place. Tonight.

George M. Cohan announces five new plays this morning, making his output nine for the season. The most important of these is by Augustus Thomas, an American drama, of course, named "Finger Prints." Among the others are a farce by José Rubens and a musical comedy by Otto Harbeek and Louis Hirsch, author of "Mary." One of the several "Mary" companies will begin playing at the Grand Opera House Jan. 31, succeeding Mr. Collier and "The Hottentot."

"The Storm" is soon to leave the Olympic, to make way for the annual visitation of Chauncey Olcott, who will play "Macushla," a sentimental Irish myth with many tenor solos, originally composed for the honeyed larynx of the star.

Tony Sarg's Marinettes will appear Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 in the Playhouse, under the management of Miss Kinsolving. "Rip Van Winkle" is the play that will be performed.

Mr. Belasco's production of "Deburau," an adaptation by Granville Barker from the French of Sache Guitry, is admired in New York, where it was presented last week. Great approval is given by the critics to Lionel Atwill, late of "Tiger Tiger," in the title rôle, that of a f[illegible]s French clown and pantomimis[illegible]s. Atwill (Miss Elsie Mackaye), who played here in "Clarence," is also of the cast.

The Messrs. Shubert, according to telegrams from New York, have banished the chorus man from "The Passing Show of 1921." Not only the chorus man is eliminated from the performance, but the musical director, hitherto regarded as a picturesque feature of musical shows, is hidden from the audience, so that the "illusion" of the Passing Show may not be impeded for the audience.

George Bernard Shaw, writing to his pal, Mr. Robert Beachley, the critic of Life, deplores the habit that audiences frequently practice of clapping their hands when they are pleased. "I wish," says Mr. Shaw, "you would start a campaign against the interruption of plays by applause and laughter. Imagine an orchestral symphony stopped every three bars or so by the audience bawling their delight at a pretty progression or a rousing fortissimo. I have twice appealed to the London public to treat my plays as sensibly as they treat Wagner's music dramas, and not make a noise until the curtain is down."

MR. Cohan's stage hands in "The Meanest Man in the World" gave him a bronze desk-set as a Christmas present. On one of the pieces is inscribed "The way to get happiness is to create it." The stage hands, it is said, created a lot of happiness for Mr. Cohan during the actors' strike last year.

Miss Clara Joel and Willard Mack are co-stars in Mr. Mack's "Her Man," a drama now hovering around New York, eager for a chance to get in.

They are going to revive "The Yellow Jacket" before long for the benefit of the enfamined cognoscenti, and Miss Juliette Day, recently of "Scrambled Wives," is to act, as she did previously, the rôle of Plum Blossom.

Heywood Broun, the critic of the New York Tribune, pronounces Barrie's "Mary Rose" to be the most devastating disappointment he has ever experienced in the theater. A most intelligent fellow, for a dramatic critic is Mr. Broun, but he could not understand what he regarded as the muddled whimsicalities of that popular fantasy. Miss Ruth Chatterton's performance in the principal part he believed to be "very bad," and he said so in a long, logical, and interesting review.

How comfortable are the critics employed by periodicals of small circulations! They can assert their opinion, frankly, and the ensuing indignation is but a zephyr. Out of the New York Tribune's hundred thousand Mr. Broun wins rebukes, perhaps, from fifty thousand patrons for the asininity of his impression. But the critic who writes as I do in a gazette with many, many more than a million readers, writes with trepidation, between the lines, fearfully, and frightened by a prospective and inimical correspondence—from nearly every one in the middle west.

Holbrook Blinn, now starring elsewhere in "The Bad Man," has submitted to an interview with a reporter from no less a dignified journal than the Christian Science Monitor. Mr. Blinn speaks with considerable feeling of the American and the European theater, thus:

"The theaters of Europe—that is, central Europe—illustrate the sort of native drama that America ought to be producing. There they take the things closest to their hearts and weave them into dramas, making them real dramas of the people, while Americans deal mostly with the things on the surface of their lives. American dramas are too much concerned with Wall street tickers, police stations, plain clothes men, and telephones. I'm thankful there isn't a telephone in "The Bad Man."

"There is a tremendous amount of native material that has never been touched by American dramatists. Their preoccupation with the surface elements of our lives has blinded apparently to the great untouched field of the inner lives of our people. Eugene O'Neill did a wonderful thing when he gave us the people of 'Beyond the Horizon.' Those who are eager for a great advance in our theater see a distinct promise in him and some of the other young writers."

From this morning's New York Times:

Despite the absence of any word of announcement, Arthur Hopkins, Robert Edmond Jones et al. are continuing to make preparations for an early production of "Macbeth," and there is no doubt that it is Lionel Barrymore in whose behalf the preparations are being made. Rumor has it that rehearsals will begin at any moment, but to date all attempts to learn the identity of the Lady Macbeth have been in vain. The situation is somewhat complicated by the fact that Lionel Barrymore is under contract to John D.

Don't Worry About Nazimova and Her Husband; They're as Friendly as Ever

"BILLIONS."

Produced by Metro. Directed by Ray C. Smallwood.

THE CAST.

Princess Triloff	Nazimova
Owen Carey Krakafeller	Charles Bryant
Frank Manners	William J. Irving
Ivan Ivanoff	Victor Potel
Isaac Colben	John Steppling
Mrs. Colben	Marion Skinner
Maizie	Bonnie Hill
John Blanchard	Emmett King
boy	Eugene H. Klum

By Mae Tinée.

GOOD—MORNING!

You've been asking lately "What about Nazimova—is she divorced? Why doesn't she have her husband in her pictures any more?" Well—news from the front! She's not divorced. Or at least, if she is, she's keeping it under cover, for in her latest pictures, "Billions," Mr. Charles Bryant, in apparently the best of health and spirits, is her vis a vis and is permitted to hog a large share of the glory. (Which no lady enjoying domestic infelicity would permit—you will agree.)

You will find "Billions" an odd, fanciful, and exquisitely photographed thing with Nazimova prettier and sweeter than she has been for ages. She is a Russian princess, who upon the death of her decidedly unloved husband, Prince Triloff, starts out incognito "to live—ah, to leeve!"

The chief joy of the princess had been, during her unhappy wifehood, to play good fairy to struggling artists. One, a poet, Owen Carey, whose verses of love, life, and liberty had thrilled her starved heart, she had assisted to publish his verses. She had, however refused an introduction.

"Poets," quote she, "are so disappointing to meet."

The poet falls heir to millions and, of necessity, lets his writing slide. He becomes a pursued and bored young man who believes the world cares for nothing but his money. Now and then he writes a poem—for which his secretary gets the credit, the latter posing, for various reasons, as Owen Carey, poet.

The princess, who adores the poems, appears and makes violent Russian love to the secretary. To her with her billions, the rich stranger's millions mean nothing.

Rather a pretty situation—yes?

That's enough to tell you of the plot. I do think, though, that you will really be quite intrigued with the production as a whole. Certainly it is well acted and directed and, from a photographic standpoint is a sight for sore een!

Not long ago, while out on location, an electrician with an alcoholic baritone, insisted on entertaining the Edith Roberts company with his original version of "My Old Kentucky Home."

Miss Roberts suddenly disappeared. She was discovered in tears (this is a press agent yarn) by her director.

"Why, what's the matter?" asked the latter (poem). "Do you know much about Kentucky?"

"No," Miss Roberts sniffled, "but I do know a little about music!"

If you ask Wesley Barry how he got his freckles he is quite apt to reply: "I was out on the roof one day, and got my face wet, and the sun came out, and I rusted." (Fresh!)

PERSIS JEAN: I thank you—and we do not throw things on the floor. (O Ananias!)

JESSICA: Yes, Priscilla Dean, the harum scarum, has met her master at last! [Wait till she sees that!] Wheeler Oakman is his name, and they do say that the Oakmans are one of the happiest couples on the Pacific coast.

ELMHURST: Bert Lytell is with Metro. I wouldn't exactly call him a matinée idol. He's something infinitely better than that. He has made a name for himself lately with his fine portrayal of character parts. Do you remember him in "Lombardi Limited" and "The Right of Way"?

FAN: Where's Mary Pickford? In California the last we heard. She spent some time recently at Carmel making scenes for a coming picture. Getting anxious for a glimpse of "Little Mary" again, are you? Well, so say we all.

HARRY D. M.: There be times when you set we wondering! Foolish question? Why don't you try it out on the cat? You must look like the sad end of a misspent life if you appear as your letter sounds. Sure, write to Wallace Reid—but perk up a bit first. Don't dim his joyous outlook. No trouble at all—but cheer up!

DELIGHT: Write to the stars, inclosing a quarter, if you wish their photographs. You say you have the addresses? If not, send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope and I'll be glad to mail 'em to you.

MR. B.: A dare, is it? Well, sorry, but I'm busy.

ESTHER: Lydia Yeamans Titus is in the comedies now. Clever, isn't she? Who broke the news to you, Esther?

W. H. W.: Happy New Year to you—in spite of the dose of bitters you hand me in your letter. Not meaning to heap coals of fire on your head by any means! You see, you forgot yourself and wished me happy New Year at the end of your letter. O, W. H. W., you're not half as mad as you wish you were!

CADIZ: Are we Percy Hammond? (Water, please—the lady has fainted!)

16 G.: Dramatic schools are somewhat out of my line, but I'll be glad to tell you what I know if you care to send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope and a letter repeating your questions. No trouble at all.

ST.: If the articles have given the pleasure you say to "a lonely old woman" they have done something far beyond what the writer has dared to dream of. Thank you for your dear letter.

A Joyful Jeremiad

By Guy F. Lee.

It was a prosperous holiday,
  The presents poured from far and near;
They stand, a brave and bright array,
  To cheer me through the glad New Year.
I'm thankful for the gifts that came
  My bachelor domain to deck;
But over all I sing acclaim
  To Uncle Jeremiah's check.

I'm fond of books and rings and ties
  And knives and pens and so and so;
With their receipt kind thoughts arise—
  But somehow I prefer the dough.
If cash of evil is the root,
  I'm left with morals not a speck,
For it's satanic to compute
  The size of Uncle Jerry's check.

The season's cards of greeting make
  A pleasant noise; each one I get
Speaks words of joy for old time's sake;
  But money talks the sweetest yet.
Mazuma is a siren who
  Can leave a feller's heart a wreck;
And that is why I'm telling you
  Of Uncle Jeremiah's check.

(CONFIDENTIAL.)
Although I have no wealthy Unk,
  It's nice to dream of one, by heck!
So I've invented all this bunk
  Of Uncle Jeremiah's check.

They Laugh at This in Vaudeville

PALACE.

Harry Holmes and Florrie La Vere:

"You hurried me so I'm a sight. I didn't have time to get fixed up or anything."

"You're a sight when you are fixed up."

"You didn't think that when we were first married."

"How d'ye know I didn't?"

"I'm going home to mother."

"I'll get a taxi."

"You won't, I'll get my own taxi and pay for it myself, too."

"No, I can't let you do that. I insist that I pay for anything that gives me pleasure."

"Every time we come to a theater you put me in a box. Why do you do that?"

"So you'll get used to it."

"You make me tired the way you talk in your sleep."

"Good lord, do you begrudge me those few words?"

"Well, I'm going."

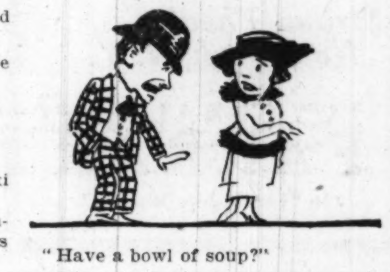
"Wait, you forgot something."

"What did I forget?"

"Me, dear."

Eddie Kane and Jay Herman:

"I want something soft."



"Have a bowl of soup?"

"If you wanna hear some music, come up and listen to my mother-in-law eat soup. Every noodle has a meaning of its own."

"What's your opinion on this prohibition?"

"Hic! When does it go into effect?"

"There never was any prohibition; they simply raised the price of liquor."

The Theaters

Williams, who had expected to present him, some time this season, in "Blood and Sand." But that play is not yet ready and Mr. Williams has now definitely deferred its production until next season.

Another rumor links David Belasco's name once more with Shakespeare. Mr. Belasco, it is said, is contemplating a production of "Henry V.," as Lionel Atwell's second starring vehicle. Mr. Warfield's Shylock, it will be remembered, is still on the way.

"The Songbird," a comedy by the Hattons, in which Miss Jane Cowl acted in Chicago a number of years ago, has just been produced for a second time, this time by H. H. Frazee. The title rôle is that of a prima donna, and Mme. Marguerita Sylva is acting the part.

Catherine Chisholm Cushing, author of "Kitty Mackaye," "Pollyanna," etc., has written a play entitled "High Noon," acted in Washington last week, with Miss Julia Dean, Miss Estelle Winwood, and Orrin Johnson heading the cast. The play is said to be promising.

George M. Cohan's newest production was also played out of town last week—on Monday night in Baltimore. It is "Love and Learn," a comedy by Vincent Lawrence, and deals with a quadrangle composed of three men and a girl. Two of the men love the girl; the third is a woman-hater. Wallace Eddinger is the woman-hater and Miss Ruth Shepley the girl.

'Aphrodite' Opera Contribution to New Year Gayety

By Ruth Miller

A WOMAN trained scientifically for prostitution; a golden courtesan who took a vast and contemptuous pride in excelling at her trade. Living in Alexandria in 1 B. C. just as the slinking shadow of libidinousness, always lurking near and inseparable from a nation at its most resplendent hour, had begun to blacken and blur the glory of its statehood. That was Chrysis of Galilee. Mary Garden's Chrysis that we saw New Year's eve in "Aphrodite."

This operatic heroine was loved by neither monk, prophet, or god. She was not converted and died at a ripe age in a nunnery, extolled for her virtues and mourned by all who came in contact with her saintliness. Instead she was made to pay in a lurid fashion the traditional wages of sin.

Chrysis met Demetrius, lover of the queen, who because she passed him by fancied her different and more desirable, and she exacted of him three crimes—theft, murder, and sacrilege. For love of her he steals the mirror which once belonged to Sappho, kills Touni, wife of the high priest, that he may have her comb, and last takes the string of pearls, pearls formed of drops of water that had touched her sacred figure, from his beloved statue, Aphrodite.

Of earth intoxicated youth is this story of Aphrodite—told of a time and a people as incredible in their philosophies to us who peruse their ancient histories, as our rites, conventions, cruelties, deceits, and hypocrisies would appear abominable in their pagan eyes.

It may be remarked by some that the enumeration of the ointments, powders, perfumes, eyebrow pencils, and lip tints that Chrysis used sounds much like the counting over of the articles on a sub deb's dressing table. But let that cynicism pass. We go to "Aphrodite" to get a morbid thrill from an erotic narrative and not to make comparisons. To gain other than a scandalized shudder from this scarlet tale one must slough off twenty centuries, return to that age when beauty, physical glorification of the body that must be burned or put under ground for purposes of sanitation after destiny has puffed out the little light within it, was frankly the object of all man's ambition.

Realizing that, Erlanger's music does not sound so shallow, tawdry, so puffed up with a flashy dullness. We grant then that he has written well; that every phrase paints perfectly the evanescent emotions, the licentious superficiality of his libretto.

Who is Erlanger? Camille Erlanger is a French composer of fifty-seven summers. He won the Prix de Rome in 1888. Paris has heard seven operas by him, "Kermaria," "Saint Julien l'Hospitalier," "Le Juif Polonaise," "Le Fils d'Etoile Bacchus Triomphant," "L'Aube Rouge," and "La Sorciere."

Erlanger has consummate skill in creating an atmosphere. He has perfect sense of the theater, and his music slips like a perfume poured from a slim vase over his opera's shifting moods and pictures.

The ballet music, frankly founded on a swaying oriental melody, is, perhaps, the most perfect bit of program music of the lot. Recall those shivering ascending scales, like shrieks of hysterical feminine laughter.

He has patterned after Wagner, but not too obviously. There is a languid, vivid theme that follows Chrysis in and out through the score that faintly suggests the leit motif idea. Then there is an occasional hint of "Parsifal."

It contains no definite melodies that will become popular ballads. The voice merely fills a languid exotic melodic line.

"Deburau," Latest Belasco Offering, One of His Best

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Those who write of the theater in America in the future probably hark back to David Belasco's production of "Deburau" the week of Dec. 20, 1920, as the finest achievement of that producer's career. And those who write of the theatrical season of 1920-'21 in New York are quite as sure to refer to it as the crowning event of this particular period.

It is not only a fine play but it is a play of the theater, about the theater, for lovers of the theater, which has inspired the caressing touch of all those who have had anything to do with it, from Sasha Guitry, whose work it is, to Granville Barker, who made the English adaptation from the French original, and from the lowliest of the supernumeraries who walk through it to the Belascos of France and America, who have staged it with infinite care and the reverence that artists expend upon the thing they love.

It is, I believe, as near perfect a production as the native theater has achieved. Its weaknesses are trivial, found only in an occasional roughness in the text, a halting and labored phrase here and there, or an overlong speech, or a rhymed couplet that pops out of the generally fine lyrical prose in which it is written.

In the story it is the simple recital of the life of the greatest pantomimist of his time in France, Jean Baptiste Gaspard Deburau. It picks him up at the hour of his triumph at the Funambules theater, when the Paris that had been cold to him followed the lead of the literary and artistic coterie dominated by Victor Hugo, Georges Sand, and Alexander Dumas, and acclaimed him great.

It follows his meeting with Marie Duplessis, who was later to serve Dumas as his model for the heroine of "Camille," and carries him briefly through that romance to its tragic conclusion when, deserted by his wife, he comes to Duplessis to lay his life at her feet, and finds her in the first flush of her passion for a young man named Armand Duval.

It jumps the intervening seven years of his physical and artistic decline to the day when, hearing again the call of the theater, he returns to the stage with the defiant hope of regaining the glory and fame that were lost to him, only to be booed by the fickle public that once had cheered him, and leaves him standing pathetically in the wings acting as prompter to his young son, who is to succeed him.

There are many gripping moments during the recital of the story, both in its drama and in the eloquence of the poetic passages. And though there are many scenes, they are so skillfully molded, one into the other, that there is no appreciable break in the continuity and sequence of events.

In reproduction two of the scenes are particularly fine—those of the interior of the tiny theater during the assembling of the audience of Parisian celebrities and later when the crowd is gone and the actors gather in the darkened auditorium to review the events of the night, and the closing scene, which gives a view of the Funambules stage seen from the wings during the last performance of the great Deburau, the most realistic, the most tellingly atmospheric scene of a theater within a theater that ever has been staged.

You can feel the presence of Belasco puttering around this miniature theater, testing the candle flares and the oil lamps that serve as house lights and footlights, settling the audience in its boxes and orchestra stalls, directing the movement of the crowd and the performance of pantomime, and loving every bit of it.

Finally, the performance itself is superlatively fine. Lionel Atwill, whom Mr. Belasco has elevated to stardom to play the name part, seems a perfect choice for the rôle. He has played many straight parts as leading man, first for Grace George and later with Frances Starr in "Tiger, Tiger," but in none of them has he approached the artistry of the force of perfect characterization that he achieves in this rôle, for he is essentially a charactor actor.

The greater success of "Deburau" has slightly overshadowed the success of Barrie's "Mary Rose" at the Empire, which, had it had the week to itself, would probably have been as enthusiastically proclaimed a supreme event of the season, though it will never command as wide or as sincerely enthused a public.

It is a puzzling and yet a beautiful play, this odd little fantasy Barrie has written around the experience of a young mother who, being spirited away by the fairies of an island in the Hebrides, returns to her people a quarter century afterward to find them grown old and strange to her, while time has left her untouched.

Into it many meanings may be read, though none of them is definitely proved. It may be, as most of those who see it insist, that Barrie sought to prove that the living should not mourn their dead, nor wish for their return—an experience that must result in more grievous disappointment and a more bitter grief than that they suffered in losing them.

Such was the experience of Mary Rose and those who loved her. She came searching for the baby she had left toddling about the house, and found a grown man, hardened and coarsened by the war and the life he had led in the twenty-five years she was away. He did not even recognize her, and there was no bond of sympathy between them, though both were pitifully eager to reëstablish such a bond. And yet there is the questioning thought of the pang of disappointment the mother must have felt—that all mothers in the audience must have felt—in realizing that had she not been called away she could have saved her son from the things that had molded his unlovely character.

The performance is uneven. Ruth Chatterton, chosen for the name part, capable actress though she is, does not realize the ethereal, childlike quality so necessary to a Barrie heroine. She is too solidly physical, too evidently self-conscious, to give the character its requisite spiritual appeal.

New York Music Letter

By James Whittaker.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Frau Oscar Hammerstein, Oberdirigentin des Manhattan Opern Haus, eroeffnete eine Deutsche Vorstellung am Weinachtstage mit eine Auffuerung Humperdinck's Maerchen-Oper, "Haensel und Gretel"—and got away with it.

The American Legion, which threatened to stop these German performances as, a year ago, it stopped those of the Star Opera company in the Lexington, was not among those present when Direktor Otto Wick raised his baton on the opening afternoon. So the performance, German from its ticket stubs to its final curtain, went its echt Deutscher way unmolested and proved Frau Hammerstein's contention that we are well over the effects of the Liberty loans.

It did not prove her theory that there is money in German opera. The audience, exclusively hyphenate, was tragically small. But it was happy. So were the performers, who were all members of that unlucky tribe of German singers who were caught by the war, lost their jobs, and have since been lamenting their lot in the automats and cheap west side boarding houses of a beerless civilization.

The singing was wretched, considered only as a vocal exhibit, but it was thrilling by its enthusiasm. Long pent up national emotions sounded in the vibrations of the cast's vocal chords. As for the listeners, they sat in various attitudes of tense sentimentality and wept copiously by way of applause. For them it was all that they can still hope to live of "Der Tag."

There is a good deal of schrecklichkeit in a real German rendition of a real German work. You have heard "Hansel and Gretel" often and remember it as a graceful, cleanly three hours of song and artless pantomime of the imaginative life of children. You have never seen a vulgar Hansel.

It would not occur to you that Gretel, that almost Maeterlinckian little girl, could have hives and act them. But this true German, realistic Humperdinck that I saw in the Manhattan staged the hives and the vulgarity and a number of unseemly antics which entirely changed the feeling of the work—so much so that no one was surprised when, at the crest of the delicately wrought scene in the second act where the angels descend Jacob's ladder from a blue canvas heaven to sing the children to sleep to the accompaniment of ravishing fairly religious strains from the orchestra—no one was shocked when a viola player capped that chiseled climax by pulling a bandanna from his coat tail and blowing a trombone trill from his nose.

Marie Mattfeld, who sang Hansel once on our best opera stages, emerged from enforced retirement to sing the rôle once more. Her opposite in the rôle of Gretel was Marie Schiller, who used to toss the German consonant nightly in the old Irving Place theater in this town when German was as usual and as inoffensive in New York as Yiddish.

Fraulein Schiller displayed her originality of histrionic conception early in the first act when she made her entrance with a dirty stocking pendant on her left leg. Fraulein Mattfeld held up her end by elaborating her part with a cute suggestion of an itch in the lower left extremity of her breakfast.

Throughout the pair simulated a seasonable case of snuffles. This added a little color and a great deal of odor to the evening. The audience reacted with loud guffaws.

As for your reporter, unfortunate victim of several failures with home-brew, he could raise but a slight near-beer enthusiasm for the local German color. Whatever may be the true Berlin tradition for Humperdinck's masterpiece, he prefers it desensualized and, moreover, has always maintained a belief in baths for primedonne.

A poster in the lobby of the Manhattan may interest the Chicago reader. It announced the coming engagement of the Chicago Grand Opera company under the heading, "Home Again." Frau Hammerstein is following out a plan of Metropolitan Opera company baiting which is part of her general theory that the sensational wins. The return of the Chicago opera to the Hammerstein roof is her trump card in this season's campaign.

The Metropolitan may lose its trump card. Caruso is sick abed with lung trouble. No trouble could be quite so disastrous for a tenor. Caruso's bellows have been the pride of the Metropolitan just as surely as Dempsey's biceps are the prida of the Kearns stables.

Caruso is the Metropolitan. His position there has built itself up year by year until now he is more director than Gatti-Casazza. His loss would be much harder for the Metropolitan to bear than was that of Campanini for the Chicago company.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

Old Man Winter's Not an Unwelcome Guest in Our City

By Mme. X.

"HO ho, ha ha!" laughs Winter. "You thought I was never coming, didn't you?" We confess it; we had begun to think he'd forgotten us. Personally, we're glad to see the old man again. A life without the bitter tang of the northwest wind stinging the cheeks and sending the blood tingling from head to toes is a rather tame affair for those born in these latitudes.

One feature of the Christmas mails, those daily packs which have made the postmen stagger from door to door for the last fortnight, was the great number of Christmas cards which presented charming pictures of the sender's garden in bloom, or of the cozy interior of a country home with the fire burning on the hearth, or of some feature of especial architectural merit in town or country house, or even pictures of the children of the family. It is a delightful custom giving a personal touch to the friendly greeting. We only wish that Christmas didn't arrive each year quite so unexpectedly on Dec. 25 and invariably take us quite by surprise.

Now 1921 is upon us almost as unexpectedly. In spite of Prof. Michaelson's discovery as to the relative sizes of this earth and the star Alpha, in the constellation Orion, we shall continue as much absorbed as ever in the latest fashions in all manner of things such as dress, food, house furnishings, funerals, amusements, dances, books, pictures, music, drama, and politics.

It means nothing to us that the aforementioned orb happens to be 27,000,000 times larger than our sun. Much nearer our finite comprehension is the indubitable fact that the fashionable woman's frock is so tight that she can't wear a petticoat under it, and so short that, what a maiden aunt of the writer's always called her "elegies," simply perish in the nip of midwinter's cold spell when awalking milady goes where drifting, wind blown, lie the snows.

An Affair of Black and White.

Apropos of the latest mode: It was the appearance last Sunday of one of Chicago's smartest women in the most recent thing from the house of Worth in Paris which caused a buzz among those who saw her. She is, to begin with, tall and slender and chic to her fingertips.

Her gown was of black satin, satin of a shiny lacquer finish, if you understand what I mean. It was tight, extremely tight, like those frocks of years ago which gave one a well defined waistline. It mounted to her chin, close fitting, holding her charming face as in a black satin cup. The sleeves were long and molded to her shapely arms. The waist and skirt clung to her extremely elegant figure in a way to which we have long been unaccustomed, nor was the skirt very short.

From a small round hat a lace veil dropped just to the tip of her nose, not unlike the masques worn by the ladies in Venice in the latter part of the eighteenth century when, on pleasure bent, they sought anonymity. From each side of the hat hung further lace draperies reaching to the shoulders.

Her skin is exceedingly white, nor does she follow the prevailing custom of touching up this pallor with even the least bit of rouge, so that the effect, taken as a whole, was a striking affair of black and white.

She reports that the prevailing French edict is that it is not important that an article of dress should be becoming. The only thing to be considered is that it be absolutely the latest mode. This requires more courage than the average American woman possesses, or I'm much mistaken. And yet what subtlety it shows on the part of the true Parisian!

A Woman One Can't Forget.

There is a certain kind of ugliness which is far more fascinating than any beauty. The most alluring, irresistible woman I ever knew was also one of the ugliest. She was, however, so brilliant, so witty, so extremely elegant, so audacious, and, it must be admitted, so without the ordinary fears and conventionalities of the average woman that she left an indelible impression on all who knew her.

She had many and quite violent love affairs, in which she often played a heartless rôle. But fate got even with her; her second husband, one of the best known men in the courts of King Edward and King George, was killed in the trenches near Ypres early in the great war, and two months later she died of a broken heart.

All the pomp and circumstance of an unusually brilliant and utterly worldly life failed to protect her from the elemental pains and sorrows to which, even women of the highest civilization are liable. Moreover, she was not of the emotional Latin or Slavic races; she was an American of sturdy New England stock. All of which goes to prove, that while beauty is undoubtedly a desirable asset, it is by no means indispensable to the woman who desires to drink the cup of life's experiences to the last drop.

A Land of Plenty.

For that delver into the past who is always at the back of my mind, that historian who, 100 years hence, seeks to find out what sort of daily life is going on in Chicago when the world at large is trying to solve such momentous problems as those left in the wake of the war, let us record here that at the outset of 1921 the average well-to-do people of this community are fully conscious of their many blessings, such as abundance of good food, a receding market in the matter of domestic wages, an increasing supply of comfortable shelter, and good clothing at decreasing rates, and a general sense of the superior advantages of life in this broad and fertile land of ours. In whichever direction we look out into the world we see nothing, no nation, no country, so well off as ours.

Returning from a long sojourn on the other side of the Atlantic a well known artist said the other day to the writer: "Why do people want to go abroad? It is cold and dirty and dismal over there. Here is life and hope and energy."

I don't suppose that a century hence they will be playing auction bridge nor dancing the toddle. Nor will the young maidens of 2021 be wearing the flimsy, frail kind of frocks with which our debutantes of today delight to challenge both Dame Grundy and the arctic blasts. Those who come after us will be farther advanced in hygiene, if not in other more intangible standards.

In 100 years there is time for great progress. It is possible that in that era there will be no such thing as individual houses, abodes built only to shelter one family. All these new hotels and big apartment houses suggest a time coming of much greater community life; a time when one well trained cook and an assistant will prepare meals for a dozen or more families, not, as now, twelve poor cooks preparing twelve poor meals for as many households. Central heating plants will undoubtedly replace the family furnace with its itinerant and erratic furnace man.

Smoke and Other Problems.

There is certainly one thing the folk of that distant age will never know or realize and that is the dense pall of smoke which hangs over Chicago these days, cutting off the light and heat of the sun, and wasting warmth and energy, besides destroying property and injuring health. I trust that by that time the chimney, for instance, of the handsome Fourth Presbyterian church on the Lake Shore drive will have ceased to win our weekly prize for emitting the largest quantities of the foulest, thickest, blackest smoke of any of the chimneys which defile its choice neighborhood. Even the water works chimney nearby, an energetic vomiter of unconsumed carbon, isn't in the same class with it.

Perhaps it has something to do with the doctrines regarding the part played by hell fires as set forth in the preachings of the old Covenanters. Certainly that smoke seems to have more than an earthly source. Even Illinois' worst coal can't be entirely responsible for such a sulphurous, heavy blackness as pours forth thence.

Perhaps a century hence the street car problem will be solved. Certainly it will not come much before then. Also, it is to be hoped that by that time the elementals of sanitation will be so well understood that the following incident will be impossible. It was on the State street car. With a loosening lick of his thumb a pimply faced conductor handed a transfer slip to a pretty young girl. Taking a seat some distance in front of the scribe, she absent-mindedly rolled the transfer slip up into the size and shape of a cigaret and held it in her mouth. In 100 years from now children of 2 or 3 years of age may be taught about germs and their bad habits even before they learn how to read and write.

May Tour the Globe.

Already society folk are fluttering on their perches preparatory to the winter's flittings to warmer, more genial climes. No one of this leisured, adventure seeking class is setting out on a more interesting jaunt than is George Porter. He is sailing this week for England with the well known writer, Charles Merz. Thence the two Sir John Mandevilles will by deliberate stages betake themselves to the Holy Land, Mesopotamia, and, if possible, central Asia.

Both will investigate the countries and nations they visit, and will communicate their experiences and conclusions to the rest of us by means of important and widely circulating periodicals. They are going to see a part of the world which has recently stepped from centuries of semi-obscurity into a strong streak of limelight.

The way is not without its perils and pitfalls. Both travelers have been inoculated for various diseases incident to travel in insanitary countries, but you can't get a similar preventive treatment against bandits, wandering Arab tribes, unfriendly insects, and other concomitants of a sojourn in the orient. If they meet with no insurmountable obstacles, the wayfarers plan to make the tour of this nice round little earth of ours before again setting foot in Chicago.

Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank gives a farewell dinner tomorrow evening at her residence on North State street for Mr. Porter and Mr. Merz at which the guests will in a measure prepare the travelers for what await them in strange lands by wearing the Chicago idea of the kind of attire they will meet on their journeyings.

We Chicagoites are becoming experts in fancy dress. The Batik ball, the Pageant of the East, the Artists' frolic, the Butchers and Bakers' next Thursday, the Arts club masked ball in the dim distance, the "Baby" dance given at the Casino next Wednesday by Mr. and Mrs. Austin Niblack and Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Wilhelm will make fancy dress our normal condition and our conventional garments unfamiliar and little worn.

New Year's Eve Gayety.

Many gay festivities ushered in the new year night before last. A large contingent of our socially prominent went first, either to "Aphrodite," for its one and only performance, or else to the theater, and later adjourned either to the Drake hotel [where 2,500 people are said to have dined] or else to the Casino or Saddle and Cycle, or to some of the big hotels over town or the loop restaurants, and so welcomed 1921.

It was probably a more decorous greeting than that of other years, though the patriotic American seems to think that the eighteenth amendment is no business of his and that by circumventing or ignoring it he best proves his right to the highest title in the world "American citizen." Be that as it may, the evening was not entirely dry, though more arid than any of its predecessors within the memory of man.

Last night's ball given for the opera artists by the Friends of Opera at the Congress hotel was a cheerful affair. The Mesdames Arthur Ryerson, Joseph G. Coleman, John A. Carpenter, John H. Winterbotham, Walter Brewster, Marshall Field, and Charles Edward Brown, who, with the help of Joseph T. Ryerson, Evan Evans, Eames MacVeagh, and Augustus Peabody, designed and carried it out, made it a gay occasion with an excellent vaudeville, a ditto supper, and as much dancing as could be crowded into the interstices of an evening which did not begin until the opera and theaters were closed for the night.

Among those who had supper parties there, besides all the above mentioned, were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Meeker, Miss Olga Menn, Harold McCormick, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh J. McBirney, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Swift, and Mr. and Mrs. Roy McWilliams.

Not Unwarranted Criticism.

Profoundly as the enlightened Chicagoan cherishes the Chicago grand opera there are moments when he or she feels that the sentiment is not as warmly reciprocated as it might be. For instance, the holders of season boxes and seats are inclined to grow peevish when, as on last Friday evening, a non-subscriber's night, the one and only performance of the much heralded new piece, "Aphrodite" was given. It will undoubtedly be presented several times in the New York engagement.

The feeling is abroad in the land that we are only a sort of rehearsing ground for the Gotham sojourn; that the company's real goal is New York's, short and brilliant season.

A Chicago Thursday night subscriber complained that three weeks in succession he had had a Donizetti opera. Also with such a great and interesting répertoire as ours, why give "Falstaff" at all? Or why repeat "Jacquerie" so many times?

I am only repeating a few of the comments. Of course, the company says: "We can't please everybody." Granted, but there are some things that please nobody, such as the afore mentioned "Falstaff."

Well, the opera season is drawing to a close. In a few weeks the company will go out on the road, as the phrase is. With it will go the height of this year's social season. There will continue to be parties, such as dinners, dances, luncheons, and card parties, but they will be of a different, more intimate character.

An Unusual Chicago Season.

When it is over this winter will go down in social annals as one of the fullest, gayest of its kind. Chicago does not take its social life feverishly. It is a decent, domestic, unworldly community, not yet quite free from its swaddling clothes and not at all in the class with the great social centers such as London, Paris, Rome, or even Washington. Let us be glad this is so.

It is possible that a big industrial and commercial city like ours could never become the rallying place and rendezvous for wealth, fashion, art, literature, and all the other elements which go to make a world metropolis. If we have other, larger ambitions than those which have made us what we are, we shall have to do a great deal more to cherish our artists, poets, writers, musicians, than we now do. Perhaps it is too soon to try for these other forms of greatness and fame.

Meanwhile, let us not lose sight of that which is beckoning us from central and eastern Europe. It is the figure of death, not unkindly death, which says: "Hurry, or I gather them in, these 3,500,000 little starving children."

Chicago has not yet come near its $1,000,000 quota. To help it the Chicago Symphony orchestra has offered its service at Orchestra hall for a concert, every cent made to go to the fund for the starving children of Europe. This is the first time the Symphony orchestra has done this. The date for the concert will be announced later.

TRIBUNE PHOTO.—

Mrs. John Borden of 1020 Lake Shore drive is one of the most charming and popular young women in society, and takes an active part in many charitable enterprises. She is not prominent in social affairs this winter because she is in mourning for her father, the late James B. Waller, but is devoting more time than usual to philanthropy. She is on the committee in charge of "Le Petit Bazar" at 615 North Michigan avenue, the proceeds of which go to the Children's Home and Aid. The above portrait of Mrs. Borden is one of the recent works of Mrs. Cecil Clark Davis, who is leaving tomorrow for the east preparatory to sailing for an extended stay in Europe.

Benefit Concert for Mount Sinai Hospital Jan. 11

MOUNT SINAI hospital workers will launch their final week's plans for the operatic night at Orchestra hall on Jan. 11, with the opening of ticket sales tomorrow at Orchestra hall box office. During the last week members of the benefit committee, with the assistance of junior Mount Sinai workers, have sold approximately $5,000 worth of advance tickets for the gala night.

The program is to be given by Rosa Raisa, Giacomo Rimini, and Alexander Zukovsky with fifty members of Chicago Symphony orchestra. Mrs. Edwin Romberg and Mrs. I. J. Kusel head the committee in charge, and will be assisted by members of the junior organization who will serve as ushers and program venders. The proceeds will be used to add new beds and other equipment to the hospital at 1519 South California avenue.

Established less than two years ago in a community where hospital aid is a luxury beyond the reach of the average purse, Mount Sinai has a record of 600 births, which, but for the hospital, would have occurred amid distressing conditions of poverty and hardship, and hundreds of sick people have been restored to health on a charitable or below cost basis. Welfare and rescue work in the surrounding community is a part of the daily routine of hospital aids.

In order to care for the daily growing list of applicants who must be turned away for lack of more hospital beds Mount Sinai workers, the organization of Chicago women which has assumed a great part of the hospital's financial welfare, are planning the benefit night on Jan. 11 to raise funds to carry on and enlarge this work.

Among those actively interested in the event are Mrs. Maurice Rothschild, Mrs. Emanuel Mandel, Milton J. Foreman, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hines, Mr. and Mrs. John G. Shedd, Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Dawes, Edward Katzinger, Maurice Kurtzon, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Schwab, Mrs. Joseph Fish, Mrs. Robert Hosmer Morse, Mrs. Emil Rudolph, Mrs. P. D. Block, Miss Olga Menn, Mrs. Emma B. Mandel, Dr. Tobias Schanfarber, Mrs. Meyer Strauss, and Mrs. Ignatz J. Reis.

This Seal makes glass the Best Container

Because it is as nearly perfect as the glass itself, this trade-marked Cap makes glass the best container. The original purity and flavor of glass-packed foods can only be retained by proper sealing. This the Cap makes possible.

When you buy, therefore, you should be careful to accept only the foods which have this trade-mark on the Cap. For a quarter century the leading packers have looked to us to supply Caps that meet all conditions, with their constant changes and increasing difficult requirements. Now for your protection and theirs, we trade-mark them. Even if heretofore this has seemed a trifling thing, you can look well to it now.

How One Bright Girl Increased Her Salary

When Miss Boyd graduated from High School she "took the first thing that came along."

But now she was beginning to find herself and to look ahead. She knew there wasn't much future in the work she was doing. And so many untrained girls were losing their positions!

It ocurred to her that what she needed was a profession—a line of work requiring expert knowledge and therefore something safe even in bad times.

One day she mentioned her ambition to one of the girls who came to see her quite often.

"Why don't you take up filing?" asked her friend. "I think you could learn it quickly and once you do there is a good position waiting for you at a good salary. Run in to see Miss Gladys C. Bridges, the principal of the Illinois School of Filing. She will be glad to tell you about the course."

So it was that Miss Boyd studied filing at night, graduated as "one of the brightest girls in the class" and got a position immediately.

Today she is getting $20 a week and is in line for another raise!

To every girl and woman who wants to better her position we offer these three words of advice—"Take up filing."

A suggestion for today:—Write for the free book—"Filing as a Profession for Women."

Yule Messages of City Churchmen Unusual in Form

By the Rev. Gardner MacWhorter.

A CHRISTMAS WISH.

From the Rector of Saint Chrysostom's.

I wish you a Happy Christmas and a New Year marked by faith that shall carry you triumphant over difficulties a discernment that you may not despise small duties while looking for great occasions; a readiness for opportunity by the discipline of ... work; an eagerness for ventures of service; a courage for the sacrifices you must make in your life.

I hope the precious hours of the future will be used in keeping well, in tasks worth while, in efforts that are commensurate with your abilities, in ambitions that are born of idealism, in loyalties that will not disappoint, and in worship that will bring you peace.

Faithfully, your friend,
NORMAN HUTTON.

EVERY holiday season for the last twelve years that he has been the rector of St. Chrysostom's church, 1424 North Dearborn street, the Rev. Norman Hutton has sent out an original greeting to his parishioners and many other friends, conveying a message of cheer and comfort that is always welcome to whatever home it may come. This year's message, considered by his friends to be the best that he has yet written, is reproduced here as a New Year's greeting to the readers of "News of the Religious World."

Our own greeting to you is found in these words taken from one of the few religious Christmas cards that were found in the shops this Yuletide:

As all good-will to all mankind shone forth from the eyes of Bethlehem's Babe that first Christmas morn, so may unending days of happiness be God's choice for you. And may that happiness of yours be magnified so that all who come within its influence will in turn enjoy a life time filled with Christmas days.

THE REV. WILLIAM J. DAVIDSON

The Rev. William J. Davidson, D. D., took office yesterday as executive secretary of the commission on life service of the Methodist Episcopal church. Dr. Davidson is one of the leaders in his church, having been pastor for six years of the First Methodist church, Decatur, Ill.; served one term as chancellor of the University of Nebraska, and for the last ten years has been professor of religious education in Garrett Biblical institute of Northwestern university.

The board of foreign missions, by reason of the additional financial strength brought to it by the Methodist centenary movement, was enabled to place 275 new missionaries in the field during 1920. The needs of the various fields of world-wide service in Methodism require annually a total of about 2,500 young people to fill the gaps in the ranks of the workers who are giving full time to the work, and to fill new places that are open and clamoring for workers," said Dr. Davidson.

"It is the task of the commission on life service to recruit such a number of young people for these types of life work every year that after their years of preparation, a sufficient number may be recommended for placement to fill the more pressing needs of the field."

It is announced at the centenary headquarters of the Methodist church that in order to accomplish this work all the boards of the church which have been recruiting young people for life service will allocate their secretaries to Dr. Davidson's staff in the central office of the life service commission in Chicago at 740 Rush street. In this office all efforts at recruiting and preparation of candidates will be coördinated to prevent overlapping and to promote economy. The new year will witness a special effort to recruit young men for the Christian ministry.

The Rev. George L. Robinson, D. D., professor of English Bible in McCormick Theological seminary, has resigned as minister of the Edgewater Presbyterian church. The members of the church are most reluctant to accept Dr. Robinson's resignation, following his two years of leadership, during which time the Edgewater church has advanced spiritually and numerically, and has also greatly increased its local budget and gifts to benevolences.

At a meeting held last Wednesday evening Dr. Robinson made public his reasons for asking to be released, which are as follows: The time has now come for the Edgewater church to call a pastor who can devote all of his time to the work, and he realizes that he cannot do justice to both his seminary work and the pastoral work without possible impairment of his health.

Arrangements have been made for the selection of a committee which will immediately take steps to secure a pastor.

Bishop Samuel Fallows will be the principal speaker at the Western Avenue M. E. church on Tuesday when the Star of Hope lodge, No. 15, of the International Order of Good Templars, will celebrate its sixty-sixth anniversary. Founded in 1854, the lodge has had a remarkable history. It is now the oldest Good Templar lodge in the world. It founded the Washingtonian home for the cure of drunkenness, through which more than fifty thousand men have passed, a large proportion of whom were cured.

The first of a series of five lectures, under the auspices of the social service department of the Episcopal Church Service league, will be given Tuesday afternoon at 2:15 in the club room at the Art institute. Dr. Caroline Hedger will speak on "The Health of the Child," and all persons interested are cordially invited to attend. A mass meeting of the Episcopal Church Service league will be held Wednesday, Jan. 12, at 2:30 p. m. in the State-Lake building, when the Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D. D., bishop of Chicago, will be the principal speaker.

Dr. Ernest F. Tittle, pastor of the First Methodist church of Evanston, will speak at the Sunday Evening club this evening. Dr. Tittle served in France with the 90th division, and participated in the battle of St. Mihiel. Out of this experience has grown the material for his address on "The Discovery of God," a New Year's message which he will deliver this evening. Before coming to Evanston Dr. Tittle held pastorates in Ohio, notably at the Broad Street Methodist church in Columbus, one of the strongholds of his denomination in the state. He delivered the Mendenhall lectures at De Pauw university.

Last Sunday was a memorable day in the history of St. Aloysius' Roman Catholic church, North Claremont and Le Moyne streets, when the founder and pastor, the Right Rev. Monsignor A. J. Thiele, a domestic prelate of the papal court and former vicar-general of the archdiocese of Chicago, celebrated his sacerdotal golden jubilee in the presence of the Most Rev. George W. Mundelein, D. D., archbishop of Chicago, and a large number of prelates and priests.

The solemn high mass at 10:30 a. m. was sung by a choir of one hundred voices under the direction of Prof. Gerard Jansen and accompanied by the Chicago Symphony orchestra, the music having been written especially for the occasion by Prof. Joseph Moos and dedicated by him to the venerable jubilarian.

In the evening in Wicker Park hall an elaborate and well prepared program was presented in which the parish, through the leaders of its various societies, expressed to the jubilarian its appreciation of his long years of zealous service.

Mgr. Thiele was ordained to the priesthood in 1870 by the Rt. Rev. Thomas Foley, then bishop of Chicago, served for some years as pastor in Sterling, Waukegan, and Rosehill, and in 1884 established St. Aloysius' parish over which he has presided ever since. By his zeal and his ability he has attained and long occupied a position of prominence among the clergy of the Roman Catholic archdiocese. A host of friends congratulated him on his fiftieth anniversary and wished him many years of continued health and vigor.

Dr. Emil G. Hirsch of Sinai temple will give the last of his series of sermons on "My Religion" this morning at 10:30 o'clock. His subject will be "The Conclusion of the Matter—A New Religion or the Old?" Dr. Hirsch will sum up all of the conclusions reached by modern investigations regarding religion. He will present to his audience a viewpoint of life in harmony with the needs of the present day—a life freed from the fetters of tradition and ceremony which have lost all significance today.

The drop is here. Not because cost of production has been lowered, but because manufacturers and retailers alike realize the justice of the public's demand for lower prices and, in an earnest endeavor to co-operate with the public, are sacrificing their own profits that this demand may be satisfied.

Rosenthal's has always attempted to do its share towards helping the public hold down the ever rising costs. Its unusual success for the year just ended is the best evidence that it has never been viewed as a profiteer.

And now a house cleaning sale of our complete stock offers wonderful possibilities to women. Every winter garment must go, and to hasten this, prices have been cut to their lowest possible level.

Illustrations could not possibly show the remarkable values being offered, and because we cannot illustrate these garments, for a picture comparison, we would like to have every woman shopper go around town and look at what others have to offer and then come here.

Such a comparison would be gratifying to you and therefore to us.

THE POTTERS

THEY GO TO THE MOVIE

ILLUSTRATED by J H STRIEBEL

by J. P. McEvoy

SCENE VI.

Tonight there is a News Weekly, a Comedy (it says so on the screen), an Animated, and a Heavy Five Reeler featuring Douglas Bareshanks in "Bite the Dust," at the neighborhood movie. It looks like a large evening.

PROLOGUE.
(In the Lobby.)

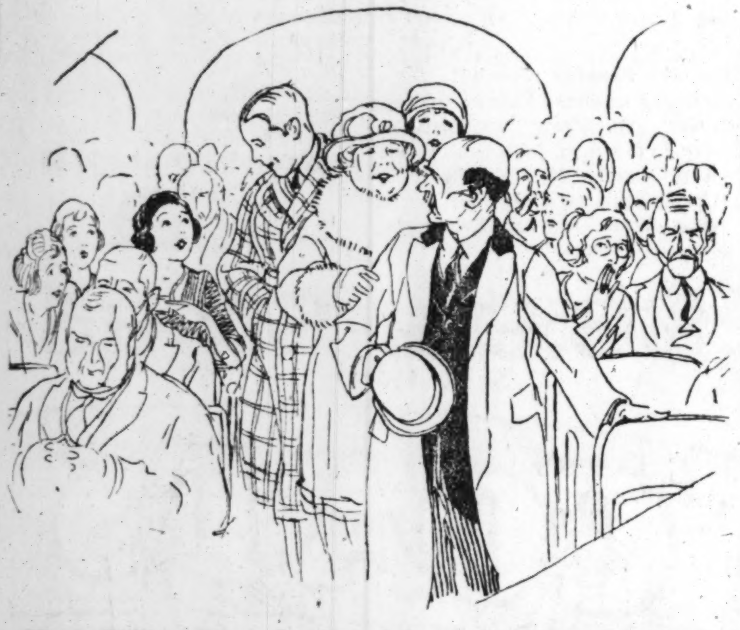
"Don't you just adore Bill Hart?"
"Fairbanks does a peachy stunt."
"Who 'ya shovin'—don't get smart!"
"Two together, down in front."
"Isnt Norma Talmadge sweet?"
"I use yeast, a cake or more."
"Hurry, Alice, grab that seat!"
"Four together—seats for four."

MA: C'mon, William; hurry, Pa;
Now, let's not get down too far——

PA: Have to take your hat off, Ma. . . .
Start your movie, here we are.

Norfolk, Virginia—The U. S. Tug Tippacanoe Is Launched Amid Wild Excitement.

MA: I love to watch these Weeklies, Pa.
They're so instructive, don't you think?



"C'mon, William; hurry, Pa; Now, let's not get down too far——"

Oh, that reminds me, tell the landlord
Some one's got to fix the sink.

The Governor's Little Niece, Alice, Christens the Good Tug with a Bottle of Hard Cider.

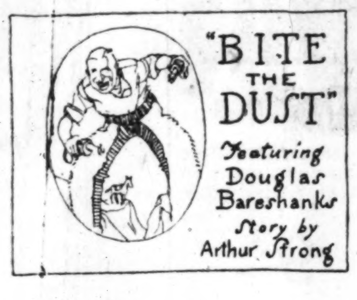
Reading from Left to Right: The Governor, His Niece, the U. S. Tug Tippacanoe.

BILL: The tongue of many an honest guy is fuzzy as a rug
And yet they've got the crust to waste that licker on a tug.

MAMIE: Lookit her hair. It's almost pink—
She must use henna, don't you think—
No, that way, ma, toward your right.
Some red hair's nice—but that's a fright.

Ohgosh, Oklahoma—This Tank Containing 800,000 Barrels of Oil Has Been Burning for Three Weeks.

PA: I guess it has—I see it burning every night I'm here.
I wish they'd put the damn thing out or get a new idear.



PA: At last we're going to see a show.
I'm going to like this guy, I know.

Scenario by Luther Gazook.

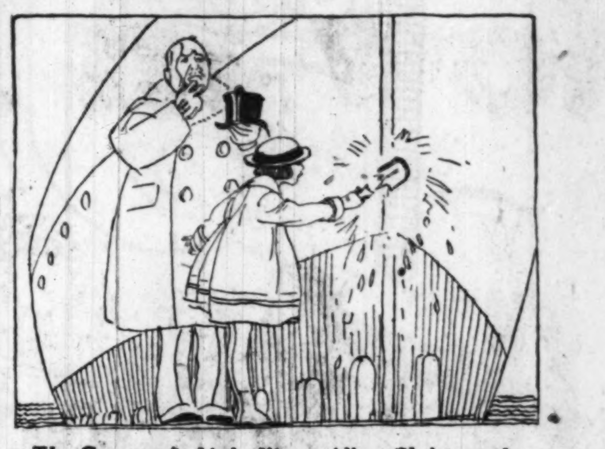
BILL: Whoever he is—C'mon, let's go.
On with the show, boys, on with the show.

Subtitles by Alexander Ooph, Ralph Bluebird, and Peter Hopoff.

MA: What are these people in the show?
PA: How should I know? How should I know?

Art Title by Ralph Muzznouzy.
Photography by George Guggs.
Backgrounds by Alan Chiarascuro.
Foregrounds by William Robinson Preewee.

MAMIE: When does it start, I'd like to know?



The Governor's Little Niece, Alice, Christens the Good Tug with a Bottle of Hard Cider.

PA: For the love of Peter, start the show.

Lighting by the International Blue Blub Company.
Heating by George Koons, Inc.
Scenery Designed by Mischa Klotz.
Scenery Painted by the Temper Studios.
Conceived, Planned, and Directed by Raymond Alexander Kafoosh.

PA: It looks as though it's about to start.
No, here's another—have a heart!

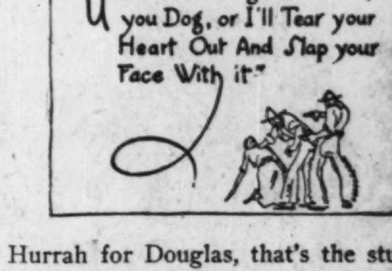
PA: At last they're off—they took their time—
These introductions are a crime.

Blissfully Unaware of the Fate Which Will Come to Her on the Winds of the Morning, She Walks This Eventide Among the Sweet Verbenas Dipped in Dew.

MA: Now, isn't that pretty? What does it mean?
What a lovely, peaceful country scene!
What a restful life the farmer leads
Among his cows and lambs and seeds!

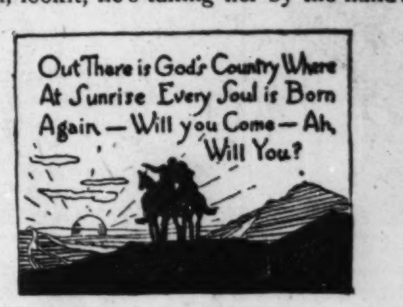
PA: Yes, a farmer's life is full of cheer,
But I'd hardly call it restful, dear—
Oh, just a minute—look what's here!



"Unhand that gir-r-r-r-r-l, you Dog, or I'll Tear your Heart Out And Slap your Face With it"

BILL: Hurrah for Douglas, that's the stuff—
Catch 'em young and treat 'em rough.

MAMIE: Look at him jump! Oh, isn't he grand!
Oh, lookit, he's taking her by the hand!



Out There is God's Country Where At Sunrise Every Soul is Born Again—Will you Come—Ah, Will You?

MAMIE: Oh, isn't that lovely—isn't that fine?
And lookit the sunset—ain't it divine?

MA: Now, here's a play I understand. Into the sunset, hand in hand—
My, isn't nature simply grand!
(And that's that.)

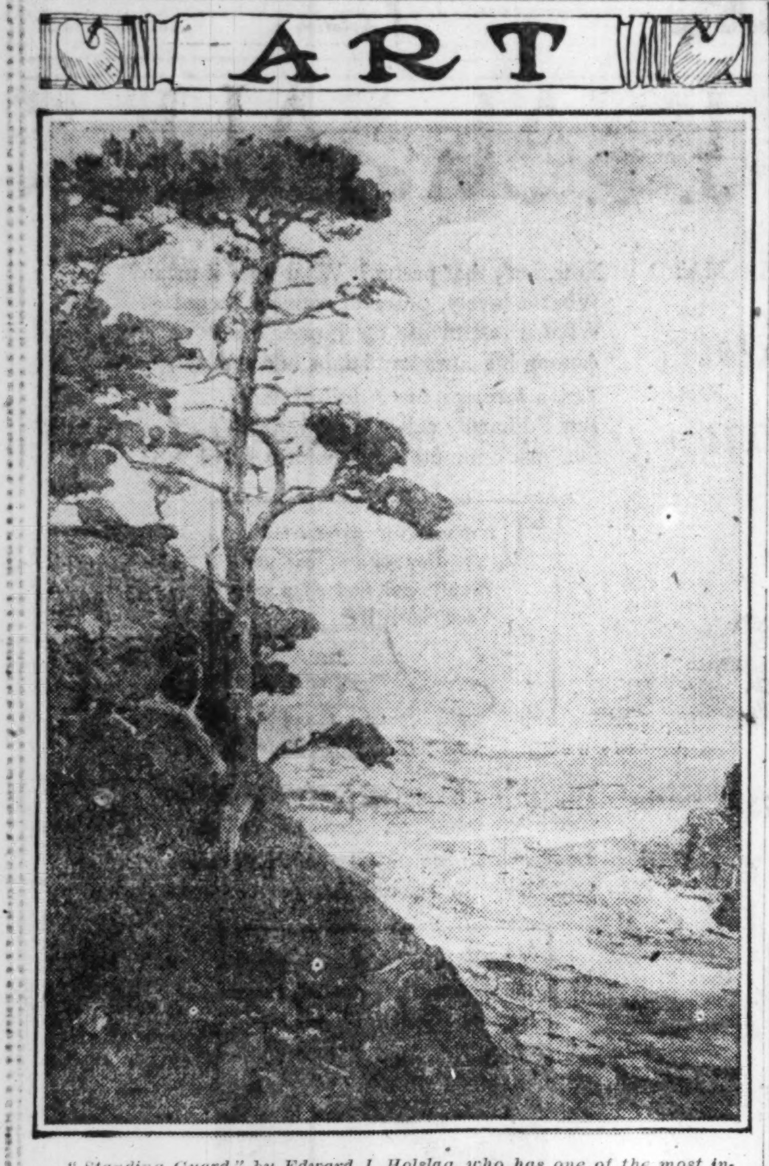
ART



"Standing Guard," by Edward J. Holslag, who has one of the most interesting exhibitions of the year at the Palette and Chisel club.

Butterfly Exhibit Gay Feature of Wild Flower Show at Art Institute

By Eleanor Jewett.

When the world was made
  Pan laughed aloud—
The echo was roses
  And silver cloud.

Pan wept and a rainbow
  Spun its arch
Where young leaves budded
  On elm and larch.

The sunset colors
  Flashed down the skies—
Pan smiled and lo!
  There were butterflies.

ONE of the most lovely features in the exhibit of the Chicago chapter of the Wild Flower Preservation Society of America is the cases where butterflies, in all their radiant and varied coloring, are shown. The longer one looks at them the more marvelous the delicate precision of their markings seems. It is as difficult to realize a fairy story as to realize that the loathsome worm you see yonder will, given time, become the glittering, swaying, gorgeous creature that puzzles and delights your eye with its rhythmic flight.

The exhibition has been so fittingly arranged that in thinking it over not one detail but the several subjects taken together stand out each one in equal prominence with its neighbor. For instance, in the long hall at the end of the galleries there are collections of dried ferns and grasses on the walls; in cases are collections of fossils and snails and clams; in long trays are various mosses; at one end is a group of mushroom pictures and at the other end prints of the dune life, with a scene from the dunes staged in real sand and peopled with tiny rush plots and trees. It is the hall as a whole that makes the deepest impression, not any one feature of the hall.

The gallery has been made attractive with plants and berries and photographs of birds as well as flowers. There seems to be nothing lacking that can in any way add interest to this type of exhibition. Beginning yesterday, every afternoon at 4 o'clock one of the collectors will give an informal talk and answer questions upon the exhibit.

The pastels by William Penhallow Henderson are now to be seen in the room where are shown the busts by the sculptor Jo Davidson. The pastels are charming bits of sentiment. They are like half forgotten dreams dropped from a summer day. They are shaded and gentle in tone, dull, soft colors set in relief by dull gold frames of an impressive breadth. If you would express their mood in sound the sound would be a sigh.

Some paintings one can whistle, some shout, some sing, some—unfortunate—are dumb or speak in garbled tones, but the Henderson pastels sigh. It is a delicious sadness, though. The kind of depression which one revels in. It is neither morbid nor petulant, but romantic, a trifle sentimental, altogether poetic.

In different mood are the paintings by Mr. Henderson in a further room. These deal in general with the life of Taos, which has been made familiar to us through the work of Ufer and Higgins and other of those New Mexico enthusiasts. The paintings are slightly more than remindful of the pictures by Randall Davey shown last year in the Arts club.

They are vigorous paintings, strong and real, with nothing of the dreamer to detract from their resonant hardness. They show you the native Indian at home in his gay blankets or in his ghastly paint of the dance. There are some canvases not easily open to explanation, others more simple in text, but on the whole these pictures (to return to the previous metaphor) chant and have nothing in common with the rose steeped sigh of the pastels.

If you really want to see marvelous

Bartlett's Greatest Sale

Tomorrow the new Bartlett Store Opens Its FIRST JANUARY SALE

The women folks of Chicago have been eagerly waiting to see what the new Bartlett Store will do for January. Since this new store was opened—only seven weeks ago—it has held a series of remarkable sales that have surprised all Chicago. The values have been amazing and the great volume of business transacted by this new store has not only been the talk of Chicago, but business men from all parts of the country have commented on the instantaneous success achieved by

W. H. BARTLETT CO.

Now they ask what sort of a sale will the Bartlett Store inaugurate during January? And here's our answer: Our FIRST JANUARY SALE will prove the most marvelous money saving Sale in the history of the Women's Wear business. While other stores are struggling to clear out their old stocks, this new store has gone into the open market and bought for cash thousands of finest Winter Coats, thousands of finest Spring Dresses of silks and cloth; thousands of finest winter weight and spring weight Suits—at discounts so great that they seem unbelievable. We are prepared to open tomorrow a January Sale of the very finest Women's Apparel—all new, handsome, latest models—at prices that are simply astounding. The savings are enormous.

Chicago's Greatest Sale

You've witnessed great sales at this new store—you've seen crowds—happy, pleased, eager, customers. But the sale we've prepared for tomorrow—and for the entire month of January—will prove the biggest event Chicago has ever seen. There are exactly 25 business days during the month of January—and we've planned to make each and every day a record breaker. Nothing like this was ever attempted by any women's wear store in America. The values we give you this month are guaranteed the lowest obtainable during 1921. We consider it the duty of every forward looking woman who values the purchasing power of the dollars she must spend on clothes to buy plentifully this month at Bartlett's.

Out-of-Town Folks

No matter how far away you live from Chicago—in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa—it will pay you to come to Chicago this January just to buy women's apparel at the new Bartlett Store. We regret we cannot fill mail orders, but we promise you this: That no Women's Wear Store in Chicago—or any town—will be able this spring or next fall to equal our January values because the manufacturers have taken drastic losses on every garment we're selling, and we're turning them over to our customers at 'way below regular wholesale prices. Yes, many a merchant will pay more for his spring garments than we're selling them direct to our customers for during this FIRST JANUARY SALE.

Buy Furs Now!

The bottom has dropped out of the fur market, and very woman who has been planning at one time or another to own a rich, warm, serviceable fur coat should buy now, and she'll never regret it. Trappers have stopped sending in skins; there's no demand. The raw fur trade today is practically at a standstill. That means a shortage next fall. Then watch prices go up—up—up. Look at the fur coats we're offering in this advertisement. Come to our store tomorrow and see the coats.

imagery and feel the tonic effect of an astoundingly active imagination, go into the print room at the Art institute and drink deep at the bubbly cup so fantastically swung to your lips by the vivid art of Odilon Redon. I saw an exhibition in Paris of paintings by Redon last June, and the same beautiful fancy that conceived them has brought these etchings and lithographs into being. They are undoubtedly queer, exotic, perverse, but not (thank goodness!) either cubistic or futuristic with a consequent emphasis on planes and elongated ribbands of necks.

The simplest things in the room are the sketch of the dog and some of the portraits, including the head of the child. But it is not to these more easily comprehended things that one turns first. No; first come such as bear these titles: "L'œil, comme un ballon bizarre, se dirige vers l'infini"; "Un Masque sonne le Glas Funebre"; "A l'horizon, L'Ange des Certitudes, et dans le ciel sombre un regard interrogateur"; "Un Fou, dans un morne paysage"; or "La Fleur de Marecage, une tête humaine et triste."

There is a power about the horrible twist Redon gives such illustrations that haunts one. Take the first one, for instance, with the eye, like a balloon, sailing toward the infinite. It is grewsome, horrible, admirable, irresistible.

Or take the "Spider," a fat, noisome creature with human features and expression on hairy, grasping legs. The repellant traits in his dread beings are the very ones which most draw you to them. The streak of nightmare that runs through each is like a madness that you enjoy, even while recognizing it as madness.

In the little gallery opening from the print room is a group of drawings by George William Eggers, which comes as a pleasant surprise in proving the decided talent of Mr. Eggers, whom we do not often meet in the guise of artist. The drawings are from the nude and, I should judge, were meant as the expressions of various moods. They are simple, unstudied, forceful—in one word—good.

With them in the room are drawings by contemporary English artists, the gift of Robert Allerton, and a group of drawings and of color costume pictures by Leon Bakst, some of which were purchased at the Arts club exhibition of Bakst work a little while ago.

One of the most important exhibitions at present is the exhibition of paintings by Edward J. Holslag at the Palette and Chisel club. It shows Mr. Holslag's genius turned to many different forms of expression. There are marines, a portrait or so, landscapes, and an automobile accident on a city street. There is something for nearly every taste.

Possibly the most beautiful painting is "Sunset," a canvas rich with color, a color that has soaked and ripened in the hot breath of the July sun, just going to its setting in the sky beyond the river. The trees are sweet with the twittering of nesting birds, and the meadow lies like a crouched cat purring under the soft stroking of a twilight wind. The romance of night sings through this prelude of dusk. It is a beautiful, warm, gorgeous thing that grows on you with the looking.

Next for sheer pleasure comes "Overlooking the Bay of Naples," painted to the tune of an old fashioned minuet. There are green trees on either hand and a path through the center where a group of people walk; beyond them is seen the blue water of the bay.

"Peaceful River" is another lovely picture, a sleepy landscape of meadows, river, and trees.

FARM & GARDEN

Not One Head of Live Stock on His 10,200 Acre Farm

By Frank Ridgway

"No lowing herds wind o'er the leas" on the horseless, cowless, hogless, and sheepless farm of 10,200 acres owned and operated by Schaal & Schaal, twenty-five miles southwest of Winnipeg, Canada. Not a single domestic animal has been used on this land in the last four years. The Schaals, father and son, do all of their plowing, seeding, harvesting, thrashing, and transporting of grain with tractors.

Mr. Schaal, senior, who was in Chicago recently, says that they do not need horses on this grain farm. He and his son operate 8,800 acres of the land, and rent the rest. An investment of $105,000 in small buildings and machinery is required to run the home place, and $95,000 worth of equipment is used on the rented farm.

Grow Only Small Grains.

Only small grains are grown on the farm included in a rotation of two crops of wheat, and one crop each of flax, wheat, oats and barley, in the order named. All of the land is under cultivation except one section.

No attention is paid to the fertility of the soil, which is a silt loam, averaging about six feet in depth. Chemical tests have shown, according to Mr. Schaal, that crops could be grown for a whole century without exhausting the fertility of this land, making exclusive power farming possible.

When it comes time to plow the land twenty-six tractors are used, pulling 100 fourteen inch bottom plows. One acre of land is turned over every two minutes, or thirty acres an hour. The tractors are again used in discing the soil, getting it ready for the grain drill. The seeding is done at the rate of 640 acres a day, using twelve twelve foot drills.

Thrash 8,000 Bushels a Day.

An average of thirty-five men are employed on the farm during the year. As soon as the grain is sown in the spring the men are released. Two are kept to repair the machinery. When harvest time comes an army of seventy men is drafted into service, and with twenty-four binders the grain is put into the shock at the rate of a section a day.

In about a week after the binders are started three large thrashing outfits begin and the grain starts pouring from the "horn of plenty" at the rate of 8,000 bushels of wheat a day. Each thrashing rig, with its necessary accessories, costs $25,000, or a total of $75,000 for the three outfits owned by this farm. From the 8,800 acres of land $400,000 worth of grain is grown and sold every year.

This grain is hauled directly from the thrashing machine to the railroad and shipped to market. Thirty grain wagons are used. They are built especially for this work with a capacity of 125 bushels each. Three of these loaded with grain are drawn from the field to the railroad with one tractor.

As the grain is thrashed it pours through a pipe into a portable granary that holds 700 bushels, which was originated by the Schaals. The granary is mounted on a heavy truck, and is so constructed that the three wagons drawn by a tractor can be loaded in five minutes, loading a total of 375 bushels of grain.

Enormous Gasoline Expense.

"We used more than $40,000 worth of gasoline and lubricating oil in 1920 running our tractors and other machinery on the farm," remarked Mr. Schaal. "My son and I are said to be the first farmers to hitch a tractor onto a sheaf loader. We tie all of our grain into bundles except the flax, which we rake up in windrows. We use two of the sheaf loaders and eight stook, or shock, wagons, as you call them here in the states. With three men on one of the sheaf loaders we are able to load four acres of flax in five minutes.

"All of the transportation of men to and from the farm is done with automobiles. We use eight cars for this purpose. It is possible for us to take our men to any part of the farm in fifteen minutes.

"Four years of experience without a single head of live stock on the farm has convinced me that power farming, on such land as we have, can be done successfully. It would take 400 heavy horses to farm our home place of 8,800 acres. Imagine the barns that it would take to house that many work horses, and the hay and the grain it would take to feed them. Besides, it would take a huge army of men to care for these animals."

WINNIE WINKLE, THE BREADWINNER. Paw's Hard Work Is Unappreciated.

Winnie was out of a job. Mother was worried, but not half so worried as father, who saw visions of having to go to work—perhaps. With feverish anxiety he perused the want ads in the newspapers. He had bought every paper so as not to miss an opportunity.

Father superintended and systematized the work of job hunting. He enlisted the aid of Winnie and Maw, but Father was the most diligent worker. "Here's one," he shouted. "Young, inexperienced stenographer wanted. No flirts need apply. We teach you." "They wouldn't need to teach me," answered Winnie from behind her paper.

The worried trio had run the gamut of every possible vacancy in the papers They checked the few that were promising, but, at best, the outlook was dismal. Winnie dropped the paper to the floor and sank despairing into her chair. "Don't worry," admonished Father, the optimist.

Winnie sprang up suddenly, and, pointing an accusing finger at her father cried, "If you were not so lazy and would do some work around here the burden wouldn't be all on me!" "Me lazy? After workin' two hours lookin' through all the papers to get ye a job! That's gratitude!" said father, with the air of a martyred hero.

METEORS
BY S. F. MAXWELL

TWO men were one day standing before a case in a museum where fragments of meteoric stones were on display.

"I can't see," said one, "how they can be sure that those rocks really fell from the sky. I will grant the claims of witnesses to have seen them fall—people are often mistaken, you know—but it seems illogical that there should be any rocks in the sky."

"No," replied his friend, "the word of those who claim to have seen them fall is often above question. Many of the circumstances under which they are found, such as seared vegetation, a hot rock buried in the ground, a strange rock that is different fron all those about it, also afford strong evidence for their extra-terrestrial origin. But if you care to listen, I think I can explain just where meteors come from, and why they fall."

"Very well; let me hear it."

"There are numerous dark worlds and clouds of dark nebula in space. Many examples of the latter can be seen with the naked eye in the Milky Way. Occasionally a dark world encounters such a cloud, and is ground to fragments. The nebula is made of these rocks we call meteors. The substance of the world becomes fragments like them. I mention this, you see, to show that there is first of all a constant supply of little stones out in space.

"The normal course of events is for the nebula to eventually recombine into worlds and stars again, and make another cycle of life. However, there is always some debris left over even after all the worlds are finished and have even been supplied with moons.

"These left-overs are called meteors. Ordinarily they merely lie in space, subjected to slow drifts this way and that. Less frequently, as some star passes near, they sweep in to pay it a visit, and then are off again. Occasionally circumstances combine to force a few to stay within the attraction of the star.

"The sun, you remember, is a star, and like them, it too has a zone of star-stuff about it. When a cloud of fragments has gas about it we call it a comet. The gas is luminous and ordinarily can be seen. If there is no gas, the swarm is invisible, and we only learn of its presence when we run into it.

"Meteors' orbits usually are extremely long ovals. Why this is true would require too detailed an explanation, but it is a well established fact. These long orbits cut across ours at all sorts of angles.

"Meteors habitually travel a little faster than the earth. We go eighteen and one-half miles per second they something like twenty-two So, no matter how they approach us, either going or coming, they are apt to strike us.

"The ones which fall in the afternoon and evening are the ones which come up behind us. They are only going a few miles per second, and not infrequently succeed in getting through the air. The ones which fall in the morning are the ones we meet head on. Our motion is compounded with theirs, sometimes being as much as forty-four miles per second. They burn with a blue streak.

"The meteors which have fallen to earth all bear evidence of having been parts of large worlds. Some scientists claim that this process of building and destruction will be the fate of the earth. We are building from the fragments now; some day, we too, will be destroyed."

"This is interesting; but tell me, how large are meteors?"

"The usual size of those we pick up is as large as a man's fist. Some are much larger, many are smaller. But when we remember that for every one that reaches earth a million must have burned in the air, we realize that the average meteor must be exceedingly small, no larger than sand or gravel grains."

The FRANKLIN

How It Anticipated Every Essential Motoring Tendency of Today

There has been no need for the Franklin to shift suddenly either claim or manufacture to meet the essential motoring tendencies of today.

For 19 years the Franklin has been steadfastly maintaining that the real fundamentals of any car's value are comfort, roadability, economy and freedom from trouble—and proving that the shortest and surest route to these fundamentals is through its own principles of light weight, flexibility and direct air cooling. Here are the facts:

The Franklin is light in weight, scaling 2445 lbs. in the Touring Car model, 2750 in the Sedan. Light weight, with flexibility, minimizes road shock, creating comfort, safety, ease of handling—and therefore roadability.

The Franklin is economical—See owners' averages:

20 miles to the gallon of gasoline
12,500 miles to the set of tires
50% slower yearly depreciation
(National Averages)

The Franklin is freer from troubles. "50% slower yearly depreciation," based on used car values, is one proof. Having no radiator and no water, it has no winter troubles, no summer overheating.

And its tires average but one puncture in more than 4000 miles, with practically no blowouts at all.

The Franklin aim has always been widest utility with greatest economy. It is accomplished in today's Franklin performance.

The Famous Manhattan Socks at the Lowest Price Ever Quoted

You have read about prices coming down; you have heard it, but this is the first real honest evidence offered you, and it is the Leiter Building Stores that are doing it.

These are the finer grades of men's wool socks that formerly sold for 1.00, 1.50, 2.00 and 2.50. The Manhattan brand known to every wearer of high grade socks. Bought from the manufacturers, who were forced to close down and sell their entire stock at a loss in order to realize cash.

7,200 pair heavy wool socks, in black and colors.

8,400 pair of heavy, firmly and closely woven home knit socks.

4,800 pair fancy mixed Jumbo knit socks, heavy weight.

5,400 pair fancy Scotch heather mixture drop stitch wool socks.

This is the largest single purchase of one variety of men's hosiery ever consummated by any store anywhere. This is all perfectly shaped and strictly first quality merchandise, made of selected yarn, in original factory boxes and bundles. Not seconds—not samples, but a full and complete line of sizes, colors and combinations, in every weight, texture and weave. Wool socks of the soft lightweight variety; wool socks in medium weight; old-fashioned home knit socks; heavy Jumbo knit socks; fancy woven Scotch wool dropstitch socks, perfectly finished toes and heels.

AVIATION

1920 a Great Year for Flying in United States

American Aviators Set Up Many Records in Year

BY MORROW KRUM.

WHAT has America accomplished in aeronautics during the year just closed?

Now, there is a question that a patriot can answer with a swelling of the chest. Some Chicagoans assert that aviation, both civilian and military, made greater progressive strides in 1920 in America than in any other country. Though it is barely possible that these boosters have become possessed with the Great Horn Habit, a summing of the United States' achievements seems to substantiate their statements. At least America has not been confining her activities to barracks flying.

Take up the question of speed. Let the Verville-Packard with Lieut. C. C. Mosley handling the joy stick and the gas throttle be presented. One hundred and seventy-eight miles an hour is the record set up by that ship in the Pulitzer trophy race, which was held at Mineola, L. I., Thanksgiving day.

"During the first three laps I managed to get the motor wide open for about thirty seconds on the second leg of the triangle and the air speed indicator immediately ran up over the 200 mile an hour mark, but the violent missing continued and I eased off," reports Lieut. Mosley. "On the fourth lap I had the motor running smoothly with the air speed indicator registering 181 miles an hour."

"The motor spluttered at 200 miles an hour. It ran smoothly at 181 after warming up, and averaged, according to the official timer, 181 miles an hour. And in 1919 Beachey kept our hearts in our throats by floating along at sixty miles an hour.

Mention should be made of J. T. Christensen, an air mail pilot, who attracted considerable attention by flying from Omaha to Chicago with 400 pounds of mail at an average speed of 162 miles an hour. Christensen made that record trip in a De Haviland. On Dec. 3 Christensen carried the mail from Chicago to New York in 5 hours and 31 minutes.

Take up the question of altitude. You all know that Maj. Rudolph Schroeder on Feb. 28 took up a Le Pere, equipped with a Moss supercharger, and kept climbing until his eyeballs were frozen and the altimeter registered 36,020 feet. That record still stands. America has been on top of the air.

The air mail service bridged the continent on Sept. 8. Since that time the coast to coast service has been hitting the ball with clocklike regularity.

From Milwaukee comes the word that Alfred W. Lawson has completed his much talked of Airliner No. 2. This ship hasn't yet set its wheels on a Chicago landing field, but if it will do everything Mr. Lawson says it will, America can boast of the most luxurious and efficient passenger carrying airplane in the world.

The improvements in aviation accessories are too numerous to detail. The bakelite propellor, the death-proof parachute, the supercharger, the reversible propellor, the turn gauges, the power plants, the electrically heated fireproof flying clothing, all have so modernized flying in America that it is safe, practical, and almost necessary.

Dutch Flying.

The Dutch navy are making extensive use of seaplanes in the Dutch East Indies, and on the strength of experience with numerous samples of this type of craft they have intrusted to the firm Van Berkels Patent, Rotterdam, the task of designing and building two-seater reconnaissance seaplanes for use in the tropics.

The machines in question are twin float monoplanes, with the fuselage above the wings, fitted with Rolls-Royce "Eagle 8" commercial type engines. Rigid bracing from the floats to near the center of each half span is used in conjunction with a thick wing-section—i. e.: they may be described as semi-cantilever wings.

The floats are of the long multistep type, entirely built of duralumin, as East Indian experience shows three-ply to be entirely unsatisfactory as a float material. The machines have a top speed of 112 miles per hour and a full throttle petrol capacity of seven hours' flying.

National Leaders See Battle Ahead in Highway Ranks

Townsend Bill Discussions Presage a Lively Roads Session

BY J. L. JENKINS.

BATTLE clouds are gathering for good roads forces of the middle west. They are expected to break the moment champions of the Townsend national highway bill find an opportunity to bring their measure before congress for final action. It is predicted that presentation of the proposed legislation again this year will be the signal for a bitter factional fight which may or may not end in a compromise benefiting the early construction of vital trunk lines.

In the initial survey of the coming battle, which active highway boosters believe to be inevitable as well as interesting, state highway officials and local organizations generally are expected to line up against the bill while powerful manufacturing and political interests, together with no mean portion of popular sentiment, will be enlisted to repel the attack.

From the viewpoint of the motorist the method of highway construction matters little right now if the necessary roads are built at once. Old campaigners for good roads differ in their attitude. They attach grave importance to the method of construction, supervision, and financing as the prime factors in getting proper highways laid down in the shortest possible time, and they object strenuously to any proposal tending to limit their authority or break down the sturdy structure of good roads interest they have labored so long to build.

Briefly, the proposal, presented by Congressman Charles E. Townsend of Michigan, urges a national system of highways to be constructed and forever maintained solely at the expense of the national government. It proposes to place the construction and maintenance of 25,000 miles of connected transcontinental roads—two main highways in each state—in the hands of a commission of five men, to be appointed by the president, and to transfer to them all of the highway powers now vested in the department of agriculture, the Council of National Defense, and other federal highway bodies.

It calls for $50,000,000 to be appropriated at once, another $75,000,000 to become available early in the building season, and $100,000,000 to become available at the beginning of each of the three succeeding fiscal years, or $425,000,000 in all. It recites the myriad advantages of connected transportation lines, their vital need, and unlimited possibilities, and carefully defines the rights of individual states to their road building programs and to their jurisdiction over that part of the national system within their borders.

Supporters of the bill have carried on a systematic propaganda campaign for the past two years. It has been favorably received in many quarters because it was believed that the bill meant immediate highway construction. There has been opposition here and there, but until recently, when the American Association of Public Highway Officials began mobilizing actual construction forces, the opposition has been negligible. Among the prominent supporters of the measure are the Motor and Accessory Manufacturers' association, National Automobile Dealers' association, National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, and Trailer Manufacturers' Association of America.

The opposition, now led by veteran road builders representing practically every state highway department and by leaders in a few of the most active and oldest organizations in the good roads boosting field, concedes every advantage claimed for a national highway system by the Townsend bill. Its leaders declare that they want connected, hard surfaced highways linking every state with every other state, that they want them built not less than twenty feet wide and maintained the year round; but they contend that the Townsend proposal can never accomplish the colossal program. They point out that the states which now match federal appropriations and are building roads mile for mile with their own and government funds, are working out the connected highway system practically and will be able in the end to build four or five connected highways through every state instead of the proposed two, in the meantime keeping public sentiment for good roads at white heat through the responsibility resting on each community for their part of the big system.

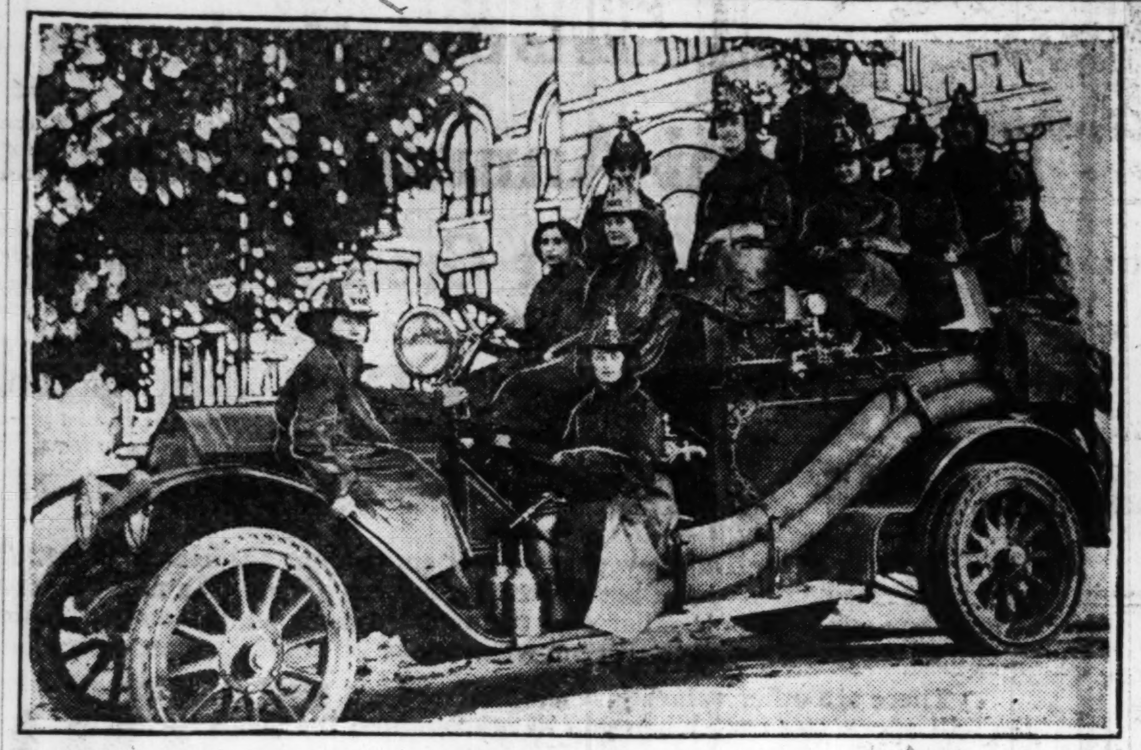
A. R. Hirst, state highway engineer of Wisconsin, who is credited with working out the best state road system in the middle west, is prominent in the "enemy camp."

"The adoption of a restricted national system," he declares in one of the first official attacks on the bill, "and a federal promise to build it, unless accompanied by large annual appropriations or provisions for bond issues to finance the construction, would be a disaster unequaled in our past highway history. A system established—travel encouraged to use it, tremendous maintenance cost, necessity for regular reconstruction on the one hand; inadequate appropriations for building, doubtful completion and amateur supervision on the other, visualizes not a national highway system, but instead, promises a national disaster."

State engineers place the necessary mileage on the national network of roads at a minimum of 50,000 and a maximum of 100,000 miles against the proposed 25,000 miles in the Townsend bill, and the average cost of the proposed transcontinental boulevards at $100,000 per mile under prevailing prices or $75,000 a mile if prices drop 25 per cent. On this basis, they point out, a 50,000 mile system would cost $6,000,000,000 and the Townsend system $3,000,000,000, or unparalleled national appropriations over a period of ten years, amounts that the most optimistic road booster cannot hope from the government.

They declare, too, that appointment of a Washington commission and the complete federalization of the system would certainly result in delays to actual road building because no county or state could be expected to bond itself for immediate building of a road which the government proposes eventually to build at its sole expense.

Resolutions for and against the measure are now being drawn by road agencies all over the country as ammunition for the nearing battle.



FAIR FIRE FIGHTERS—Dainty misses of the Agnes Scott college, Decatur, Ga., are the first to invade another profession in the exclusive man's world. They believe in a motorized fire department, too. Wonder if they play checkers in the station house and slide down brass poles to answer each alarm.

An Arizona Rescue.

The Chicago Motor club reports that a large part of the bond issue recently authorized by the voters of California will be used in improving the desert road from Needles to the foothills east of San Bernardino, so that in time the "horrors" of the desert will have been dissipated in the minds of eastern motorists desiring to make the journey to or from the coast.

Motorists Donate Nearly $6,000,000 in License Fees

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 1.—[Special.]—Nearly $6,000,000 has been collected in automobile license fees this year by Secretary of State Louis L. Emmerson. The total to date is $5,886,771.82.

In the collection of these fees Illinois has made a record for economy. The cost has been only 5.3 per cent of the amount collected. The average cost in other states is 10 per cent, according to reports made at the recent national meeting of secretaries of state.

The amount collected in automobile fees this year is five times as much as was collected in 1916, the year previous to the beginning of the present administration.

The growth of automobile fees since 1911, the first year fees were collected, has been phenomenal. The total for that year was $105,344, collected from 38,269 automobile owners.

Since that time the amount of fees and the number of automobiles has been as follows:

Year.	Fees.	Autos.
1912	$ 375,716.22	68,012
1913	507,134.77	94,646
1914	703,403.70	131,140

Business Revival Seen in Opening of New York Show

Four Hundred Exhibitors Ready for National Auto Event

MOTORDOM's biggest yearly event, the National Automobile show, will open in Grand Central palace next Saturday. This year the exposition will far eclipse any of the twenty shows that have gone before. Not only will the twenty-first annual display break all records but it will also be the most comprehensive automobile show ever held in the world.

The first auto display was held in Madison Square garden in 1900 and had a total of only sixty-six exhibitors. There will be nearly 400 exhibitors at this year's exposition, which will be held under the auspices of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. Of this total eighty-eight concerns will display passenger cars. No motor trucks will be displayed.

New York City will be the Mecca of automobile enthusiasts during the next two weeks. Hotels report reservations in larger number than ever before, the demand coming from all parts of the country. Many who will be in New York for the show have already arrived, and interest appears greater than ever before. In fact, sentiment throughout the trade appears to be that the automotive industry is about to come back with the show.

The show will open at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, Jan. 8, and will remain open until 10:30 p. m. It will not be open on Sunday, but beginning Monday, Jan. 10, it will be open daily from 10 a. m. until 10:30 p. m. up to and including Saturday, Jan. 15.

Among the cars to be exhibited this year are Allen, American, Anderson, Apperson, Auburn, Briscoe, Buick, Cadillac, Case, Chalmers, Chandler, Chevrolet, Cleveland, Cole, Columbia, Commonwealth, Crow-Elkhart, Davis, Detroit Electric, Dixie Flyer, Dodge, Dorris, Dort, Du Pont, Elcar, Elgin, Fergus, Fiat, Franklin, Friend, Grant, Hanson, Hatfield, Haynes, Holmes, Hudson, Hupp, Jackson, Jordan, Kissel Kar, Kline, Lafayette, Lexington, Liberty, Lincoln, Locomobile, Lorraine, McFarlan, Malbohm, Marmon, Maxwell, Mercer, Milburn Electric, Mitchell, Monroe, Moon, Nash, National, Noma, Oakland, Oldsmobile, Packard, Paige, Pan-American, Paterson, Peerless, Piedmont, Pierce-Arrow, Pilot, Premier, Rauch & Lang Electric, Reo, Roamer, R. & B. Knight, Saxon, Sayers Six, Scripps-Booth, Standard, Stanley, Stearns, Stephens, Stevens-Duryea, Studebaker, Stutz, Templar, Velie, Westcott, and Willys-Knight.

GOSSIP OF THE AUTO TRADE

A HEARTY welcome and predictions of a certain American success have gone out from Chicago's "Automobile Row" to the newest of its New Year's family additions—Rolls-Royce western branch. Western headquarters for the famous English car have been opened at 900 Michigan avenue and a complete organization formed to handle the limited output from the new Rolls-Royce American works in Springfield, Mass. These American chassis will be identical and interchangeable with those produced by the company in the Derby, England, works. No bodies will be built in the American plant.

The building of the pyramids and completion of the Panama canal were spectacular world events, but, according to C. E. Stebbens of the Maxwell Sales company, they were second in size to the American highway building program which is calling for the expenditure of more than $1,000,000,000. He points to the stupendous plan as the object of chief interest in the convention of the American Road Builders' association to be held the week of Feb. 7 in the Coliseum.

New York City's first highway transportation show will open its doors tomorrow at the Twelfth Regiment and First Field Artillery armories.

The Lexington Chicago company celebrated holiday week with a banquet given its employés at the sales room, 2209 Michigan avenue. President O. T. Mitchell received a handsome present from his business family as a feature of the dinner.

Two important changes in the personnel of the Reo Chicago branch organization include the promotion of L. B. Ewing to the office of general sales manager and of P. A. Collins to the service managership.

In sincere appreciation for the shower of holiday greetings received by THE TRIBUNE from scores of automobile builders and dealers, "Motordom" returns their own predictions of success and assurances of high good will through the New Year in the sturdy slogan: "1921 Will Reward Fighters!"

At these prices Auburn is starting the buying season off with the best automobile value on the market.

Whether or not you are familiar with Auburn values of the past, you must be impressed by this announcement. IT CONCERNS YOU VITALLY.

Perhaps we have reduced this price slightly more than you anticipated. This, then, is conclusive evidence of value, judged by your own impressions of Auburn's worth.

Or, perhaps you didn't hope for any decrease in Auburn prices, which, as you know, have always been comparatively low. Here, again, you must admit that this saving of $200 and over is a convincing proof that immediate purchase is desirable.

Motorists who know the quality and value that have been built in Auburn cars for twenty-one years, will be quick to take advantage of the new prices.

Most assuredly greater values cannot be expected.

Why is ELMCO Now Used On So Many Chicago Fords?

A Warm Engine All Night

A mild, steady heat from the Elmco Heater keeps the water in your Ford circulating all night.

Plug into the heater when you drive into your cold garage and the Elmco will do the rest.

Makes Starting Easy

There are two sets of plugs on every ELMCO—one for slow heat, the other for quick heat.

In extreme weather plug in for quick heat 15 or 20 minutes before you are ready to start, and the ELMCO will get your Ford motor warm for a quick, easy start.

No More Engine Racing

Nothing shortens the life of a Ford like long, hard engine racing. The Elmco prevents this. An Elmco will add miles to the life of your Ford, cut out repair bills, and prevent loss of your time in getting to work.

Economical and Safe

The heating element of the Elmco is enclosed, making it safe and fool-proof. The Elmco can be installed in 10 minutes. Once installed, it stays on your Ford.

The Elmco averages about 3 cents a night for current. It saves you ten times that much in repair bills, time and worry. It pays for itself any winter night.

Get Your Elmco Today

We are making it easy for you to own an Elmco.

Put one on your car—try it for ten days and if you are not absolutely satisfied, your money will be refunded. We won't sell an Elmco on any other basis—the customer is the judge.

If you live outside of Chicago use the coupon.

California.

FOR SALE—THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA makes you this bargain offer: The State Land Settlement Board of California will sell bona fide homeseekers an irrigated farm of 20 or 40 acres in San Joaquin Valley, with 36½ years' time for deferred payments.

These farms are in Farm Land Unit No. 3, consisting of 1,540 acres in Merced County, the heart of the famous San Joaquin Valley, and will be offered to bona fide homeseekers.

These carefully selected lands were acquired by the State of California for settlement purposes. A complete irrigation system is being installed. Price per acre varies according to location. Five per cent of purchase price payable when deal is made; remainder in semi-annual installments, extending over a period of 36½ years, with interest at 5 per cent per annum.

When this unit is exhausted, other similar tracts will be opened up as rapidly as land can be prepared for the new settler.

An unusual opportunity to acquire a small ranch in winterless California, at a minimum cash outlay.

All deciduous fruits are profitably grown, and alfalfa is a paying crop. Ideal conditions for stock and poultry. You have benefits of established communities. Schools are ready, and fine roads. The various fruit associations have a remarkable marketing system. You raise the fruit; no bother about markets.

You can farm all year in California. The State Board's booklet about these lands and plans for financing improvements. Santa Fe illustrated folders descriptive of San Joaquin Valley and the trip there, mailed on request.

Let me help you plan your trip.

FOR SALE—
CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LANDS.
Your last opportunity. In Central Alberta and Saskatchewan are rich park lands—open prairie ready for the plow, interspersed with trees, which afford excellent shelter for stock. Here grain growing, dairying, and live stock raising are being carried on successfully. The country is ideal for mixed farming. The Canadian Pacific Railway is offering a large area of these fertile lands in Lloydminster and Battleford districts. This fertile land will become the home of thousands of prosperous farmers. On similar land Seager Wheeler grows world's prize wheat. Near Lloydminster the world's prize oats have been grown, and butter of the highest quality is made. A man can soon become independent on a farm in this district. These lands can be bought now at an average of about $18 per acre. You pay down 10%, no further payment of principal until end of fourth year, then sixteen annual payments. Interest is 6%. M. E. THORNTON, Supt. of Colonization, Canadian Pacific Railway, 104 Ninth-av., E., Calgary, Alberta.

To Live Opportunity-Seeking Men

The livest and fastest growing phase of the automobile industry is the electrical end. 80% of auto troubles are electrical and LESS THAN 5% OF THE MEN IN THE INDUSTRY KNOW ANYTHING ABOUT THEM.

To meet this need AMBU service stations are to be opened through the city by the AMERICAN BUREAU OF ENGINEERING. Men to be chosen to operate these must have the following qualifications:

A clean past record that will stand investigation.

Some experience along mechanical lines or a strong inclination for mechanics or electricity.

Age between 21 and 50; clean cut, industrious and eager to step into their own business, requiring hard, conscientious work, but offering unusual possibilities for future success and an income beginning at once.

The only obligation applicants are put under is the installation of the famous AMBU System which is absolutely essential to the business. Plans and details are given to repay the small investment in a short time or payment can be arranged out of profits.

If you are the right man with the necessary qualifications your success is practically assured. The AMERICAN BUREAU OF ENGINEERING will assist you in securing a good start in the business by an intensive direct by mail campaign.

This is a genuine once-in-a-lifetime opportunity not to be overlooked by any man eager to make a success in life.

THE RESALE SHOP

3429 S. Michigan Ave.

takes this opportunity to thank its many friends and patrons for the remarkable manner in which they responded to our Tribune classified advertising by buying from us at a time when money was tight and general business slow.

The Resale Shop had for some time wanted revenge on the manufacturer for forcing us to sit on his doorstep and beg for merchandise. Then came the

and the public sat back and refused to buy from the retailer who condescended to sell at his own figure high priced merchandise. The result was at once noticeable. The manufacturer decided to sell and actually delivered merchandise and acted pleased to sell us. Then we started to sell and to buying goods on a falling market and selling at less and less for several months, hammering down the prices until today people who have always considered a fur coat a luxury are either wearing one or are considering buying very soon. So here's to a happy and prosperous New Year.

We sell only brand new sample fur coats—nothing second hand. We guarantee everything we sell.

A Prophecy

During 1921 we shall continue our policy of underselling all other Chicago stores. We will remain the bargain center of this city. We have just finished the most extensive campaign of Tribune classified advertising ever put behind a Chicago retail store. We are going to do more of this advertising in 1921 than we did in 1920. Thousands more of people are going to get acquainted with us, and we are going to sell a lot of merchandise. So watch us go!!!

A Reminder

As a reminder, note that we still have left a few Hudson Seal Coats at $275 which formerly sold for $600 to $700. Also French Seal Coats for $115 which formerly sold for $375. These coats come trimmed with marten, beaver, or squirrel and are of latest designs and models.

We are open daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. and on Sunday from 10 to 4, except on holidays. We will not be open on Saturday, Jan. 1, but will be open on Sunday, Jan. 2, as usual.

35th-st. "L" station and Indiana surface line less than two blocks from store. If you use an automobile you are free to park it at the curb, as there are no parking restrictions in our neighborhood.

HERE'S A BIT O' THE OLD WORLD ON BOUL MICH

Take a Peek Through "The Courtyard."

BY AL CHASE.

Did you ever, when strolling along upper Michigan avenue, turn in at the curved archway in the building at the southeast corner of Ontario street and take a peek at the courtyard? We thought not. Well, the next time you are on Boul. Mich. and perhaps are wondering at the scraggly appearance of the new link's sky line—or rather at its lack of sky line—turn in at the archway at No. 619, and you'll forget all about the architectural lack outside in your amazement at the beauties of "The Courtyard," as it has been christened.

We doubt if you can find a more attractive reproduction of an old world nook in Greenwich village, or on the French side of Canal street in New Orleans or in Quebec. If you ever did find such a lovely bit in those places you'd probably tuck it away in your memory and talk much about it. But, of course, being in your home city, you'll probably not worry your head about it.

Black Sheep of Backyards.

"The Courtyard," however, is not only well worth visiting, but it's worth knowing about, for it shows what money, coupled with initiative and the knowledge of the value of architectural beauty, can do to an apparently useless part of a piece of property.

Two years ago the courtyard back of the two buildings at Michigan and Ontario couldn't be dignified with such a name. It was merely a backyard—and a black sheep of the backyard family. It looked hopeless when one took a slant at the army of tin cans and bottles and rubbish in general.

When Chester A. and Raymond C. Cook, trustees of the Ira B. Cook properties, bought the property two years ago, they tried to forget the tin clad backyard, and had decided to remodel the old buildings, when the idea of "the courtyard" was suggested by Nancy Cox McCormack, Fred Hinkens, and Mrs. Clara B. Welles of the Kalo shop.

Architect Robert S. De Golyer was asked to look at the property. He shuddered when he came to what resembled a battlefield in Flanders, but the Messrs. Cook told him to go as far as he liked with the tin can graveyard and so he got busy. A few months ago he turned over "The Courtyard" to the owners as completed.

Even if the average stroller had'nt noticed it during the transformation period, artists, architects, and shop owners had, and long before it was completed every foot of shop, studio, and office space was rented and a long waiting list made out.

Deserts Loop for Link.

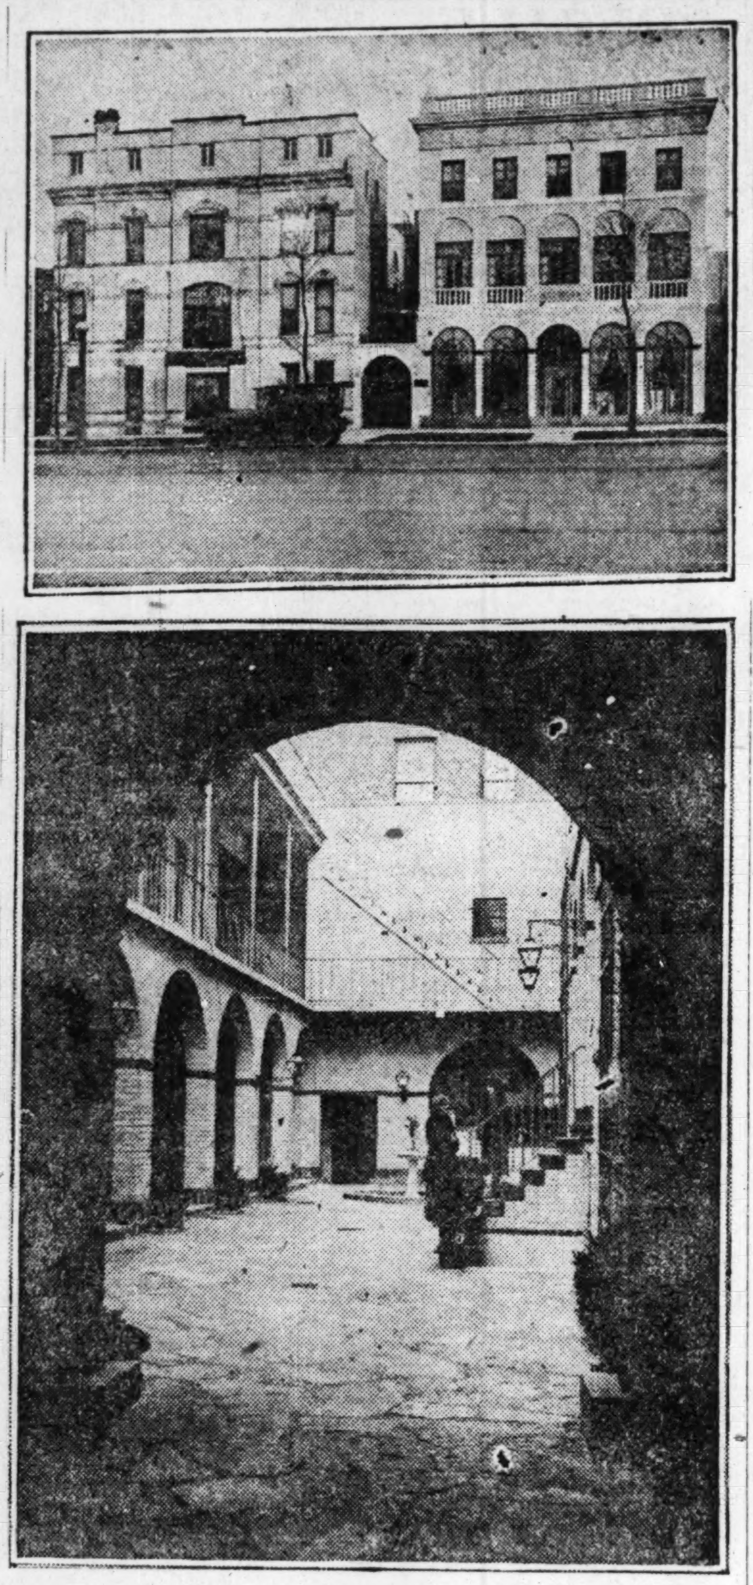
One of the first tenants was a loop deserter—William F. Castberg, millinery and gowns—who wanted to get closer to the Gold Coast. Mr. De Golyer designed for him one of the most attractive shops in the country. It occupies all the first floor of the south building, and upstairs space also.

Below Castberg's is the newly opened "Le Petit Bazar," where antiques, novelties and trifles are sold, and in connection with it is the tearoom of the Home Delicacies association, where luncheon and tea are served, in charge of Mrs. William Vaughan Moody. Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, and an imposing list of social register listees, all members of the Chicago Woman's committee of the Illinois Children's Home and Aid society, are in charge of the bazar, profits from which go to the aid society. One of the interesting specialties of the bazar is all kinds of decorating in charge of Mrs. Carpenter.

Courtyard of Nations.

"The Courtyard" might well be called a courtyard of nations, for the shops are of many nationalities. For instance, Tatman's specializes in English glassware. Shigahisa Mori, who hails from Nippon, has an attractive "arts of the orient" shop. The Italian shop is owned by Marcia E. Corbyn. Mr. and Mrs. Pierre de Lanoux are Parisian—Mrs. de Lanoux is a portrait painter and her husband a writer. Mr. Castberg is Swedish.

Some of the other tenants of "The Courtyard" are: Frederick Grant, artist; Arthur Heun, architect; Mary H. Wicker, portrait artist; James H. Kehler, writer; Mrs. William Deane (Nancy Cox McCormack), sculptress; Alice Louise Karcher, interior decorator; Carolyn Hazard, social secretary; Alfred Hoyt Granger, architect; Neoma Nagel, interior decorator; Burleigh Withers company, commercial studio; Oliver W. Snyder, designer; Evelyn Bridge, etcher.



Recall the worst example of a back yard you ever saw—decorated with millions of cans and other kinds of ammunition hurled at wailing felines during decades past—and you've got a good picture of what "The Courtyard" at 619 Upper Michigan avenue was before Architect Robert S. De Golyer took a hand at it.

The pictures above show what it's like now and the story in another column tells about it more fully. Note the flagged paving—it was laid by Paul Kruger, born in Metz, Lorraine. He also built the fountain with its statue of Narcissus from Pompeii which you can see just back of Miss Margaret Sullivan, who stands at the foot of the steps facing Miss Josephine Farina.

Work is to start shortly on the new Lake Shore Trust and Savings bank building on the vacant northeast corner of Michigan and Ohio, which adjoins The Courtyard buildings on the south.

$300,000 BANK FOR BOULEVARD

Work will start tomorrow on a new south side bank building at the southeast corner of Grand boulevard and Thirty-fifth street, to cost approximately $300,000 and to house the newly organized Roosevelt State bank. Architect Albert Anis is drawing plans for a monumental type of structure, to contain, in addition to the banking quarters, three stores and fifteen offices.

The first unit will front 140 feet on Grand boulevard and thirty-five feet on Thirty-fifth. The second unit will front ninety feet on Thirty-fifth, giving a total ground area of 140x125. Alexander Flower is president of the new bank. S. Flower is vice president.

COURTS UPHOLD ZONING LAWS ALL OVER U. S.

Gotham Expert Tells of Decisions.

BY EDWARD M. BASSETT.

The city of New York was the leader in establishing a building zone ordinance with official maps showing districts within which certain uses, heights, and sizes of buildings are prohibited. St. Louis, Newark, Rochester, Milwaukee, Washington, and numerous smaller cities, including Yonkers and White Plains, have followed New York City in adopting zoning regulations and maps.

EDWARD M. BASSETT. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

All have followed the method of three maps, one for use, one for heighth, and one for size of future buildings. All have followed New York in placing the regulations under the police power after obtaining a grant of the zoning power from the state legislature.

Many Legal Decisions.

The numerous zoning ordinances of the last four years, including that of New York City, have brought about many legal decisions, some of them by the highest courts of the various states. These decisions have uniformly upheld the zoning ordinances and have stated over and over again that, where the regulation was for the health, safety, and general welfare of the community, it was not necessary to make payments to property owners.

Building zone ordinances throughout the United States, where passed under a grant of authority by the state and having a relation to the health, safety, morals, and general welfare of the community, can now be confidently declared to be constitutional and they will be protected and enforced by the courts.

The Massachusetts legislature prepared a law empowering all cities and towns to pass zoning ordinances and in accordance with a constitutional requirement requested the opinion of the Supreme judicial court of that state before passing it. In May, 1920, the court handed down a decision in which they said that they were not able to perceive in the proposed law anything contrary to the fundamental law of the commonwealth.

Held Constitutional in Ohio.

In April, 1920, the Ohio court of Common Pleas, passing on a case which arose in East Cleveland, held that it was constitutional to prevent apartment houses in districts of private homes.

The Court of Appeals of New York state in July, 1920, handed down a decision in a case arising in New York City (Lincoln Trust company vs. Williams Building corporation, 229 N. Y., 313), unanimously agreeing with Justice McLaughlin of that court, whose opinion in part was as follows:

"The exercise of the police power, within constitutional limitations, depends largely upon the discretion and good judgment of the municipal authorities, with which the courts are reluctant to interfere. . . . I am of the opinion that the resolution in question (the zoning ordinance of New York City) is a valid one."

How About Chicago?

The foregoing are but a few of the courtdecisions which are accumulating in support of zoning. Modern cities will not go back to the haphazard, unregulated and chaotic building conditions which formerly injured home owners, apartment house owners, and storekeepers alike, and which encouraged the invasion of harmful uses and helped to create blighted districts.

Every large city of the United States is today either working under a zoning ordinance or preparing its data and maps for the establishment of one.

WANTS CITIES GIVEN ZONING POLICE POWERS

BY CHARLES M. NICHOLS.

The neighboring article by Edward M. Bassett of New York City, which cites the more recent decisions of the courts, all sustaining comprehensive zoning as a proper exercise of police power, is timely to us who live in Illinois. For at this time there is presented an opportunity to correct the vital defects in our present legislative enabling act.

CHARLES M. NICHOLS. [Moffett Photo.]

The next general assembly of our state meets in January and there should be presented to it a substitute act curing these defects. It should be one which does not contemplate "piecemeal zoning" (which already has been discarded by other and more progressive states). In fact, it should be one which will not invite an adverse decision of the court at the very outset.

The simplest form that this legislation could take would be a donation of whatever police power the state possesses regarding the height, area, and use of buildings, to the municipalities.

William M. Lawton, attorney for the Cook County Real Estate board, has been working on such a bill for several months. When drafted it will be reviewed by Mr. Bassett and other able constitutional lawyers and then submitted to the attorneys of all civic organizations in Chicago interested in zoning, to the Chicago Plan commission, the state housing commission, the Chicago zoning commission (when appointed) and attorneys for the various municipalities in Illinois who are contemplating zoning, before it is finally presented to our legislature.

Expect Decision on Board Amalgamation This Week

A definite reply from the Cook County Real Estate board to the suggestion of a merger advanced by the Chicago Real Estate board is expected this week. President A. W. Stanmeyer will name a committee after the annual installation of officers of the Cook county board on Tuesday, which will at once take up the question of amalgamation.

MARKET STREET LEASE.

The six story building, 40x100, at 29-31 South Market street, has been leased by the H. Ostrowsky company, general merchandise, now at 1136-38 South Halsted street, from Francis Boddie Merry for ten years from Jan. 1 at a term rental of $90,000. The owner is having the property remodeled from plans by Minchin & Weller, Inc., architects and engineers.

RENTALS JUMP 60% IN WHOLESALE DRY GOODS DISTRICT

Wholesale dry goods district rentals are increasing, according to John R. Magill & Co., who have renewed several leases in the ten story Van Buren building, 210-14 West Van Buren street, for Ferdinand Siegel and Mrs. Maurice L. Rothschild, owners, at a term rental of $93,000.

The new leases are for three years from Jan. 1, at a total annual rental of $31,000, compared with $19,400 under expiring leases, indicating an increase of $11,600 annually, or approximately 60 per cent. The tenants are: Harold Moses, Paragon Hat company, Leopold, Solomon & Eisendrath, B. A. Knapp company, Kahn & Tower, Standard Sewing Machine company, and the Thomas Cusack company.

The Fire Foam Engineering company has leased from the Typewriter Emporium, Eugene S. Kimball, and others the store and basement at the northeast corner of Lake and Dearborn for three years and five months, commencing Dec. 1, 1920, at an aggregate rental of $20,000. John R. Magill & Co. represented the lessors and Edgar M. Snow & Co. the lessees.

Jack Lund and Ethel Kendell have leased from the Chicago Title and Trust company, trustee, the building at 6046 Cottage Grove avenue, now being operated as a dancing academy known as the Merry Gardens, for a term of years at a rental of $4,000 a year. Mark Levy & Bro. were brokers.

"Things to Think About."

President L. M. Smith, new executive of the Chicago Real Estate board, in a bulletin just issued, under the caption "Things to Think About," makes the following comment:

"An invitation was recently issued, asking five civic bodies to assist in preparing the city budget. The Chicago Real Estate board, representing 87 per cent of all moneys collected for taxes, was overlooked. Why?

"About 200 of our active and energetic members are affiliated with a commerce organization and give most of their time and best thought to it. Why are they there? Does that institution possess a broader vision in real estate relationship to civic questions Do these 200 men disagree with the policy of this board in its attitude and bearing to outside matters?

"Should its horizon be widened to engage and attract our 200 men, now self-assigned to the credit and benefit of that nonreal estate body? Would that concern resent our interference in their line of business? Isn't the Chicago Real Estate board the only acknowledged authority on that subject?

"Does the board owe to itself the right and duty to enter into and help solve non-political hydra-headed city problems, most of which, directly or indirectly, finally attach to and become an influence on our real estate industry?

"Is it up to us as citizens and as a leading factor in the business world to offer services where qualification, self-protection, and experience count?"

Waukegan Next Illinois City to Have Realty Board

Waukegan is going to have a real estate board, according to J. W. Work, president of the Evanston real estate board and recently appointed regional director of the National Association of Real Estate boards. Elgin is next in line. Mr. Work recently completed the organization of a real estate board in Aurora with thirty-three active members.

Grant Baking Company Builds $200,000 Annex

Work is now under way on a $200,000 two story 110x150 addition to the Grant Baking company at 3021 West Lake street, from plans by Architect Richard Griesser. It is expected to be finished about May 1.

PAPER STOCK COMPANY BUYS.

The Francis Hughes company, paper stock, has purchased from William A. Coleman the 264x125 at the northwest corner of Loomis street and West Twenty-first place, for an indicated $40,000. It adjoins the plant of the company at Twenty-first street and Loomis and will be used for storage and later for plant expansion.

Realtor Notes

John Budinger, former county commissioner, has formed the real estate firm of John Budinger & Co. and has opened offices at 2449 Wentworth avenue.

M. Hoffman & Co. have acquired the real estate business of Dowes & Co., 2240 East Seventy-fifth street.

John Todd and Oliver E. Tupes have taken over the real estate business of Wilson & Co. at 2200 East Seventy-fifth street.

Hayden & Stone of 6430 South Halsted street announce that J. Edson Claus, manager of their rent department for the last five years, has been admitted to partnership. The firm has been in the real estate business in the vicinity of Halsted and Sixty-third streets for twenty years. The partners now are W. F. Hayden, W. S. Hayden, and Mr. Claus.
